It is said that the Democrats of Indiana have arrived at an understanding.—Kan. City Star (Ind.)

Why don't they forward it to New York p. d. q.?

An entire change of conditions is necessary to bring about the Democratic victory which is possible in November.—Boston Post (Dem.)

Well, as Abe Baum would say, I shall smile!

In attempting to print Henry George's book on the Government presses and to circulate it at public expense under Congressional franks and without payment of postage the Democrats gave that book the strangest endorsement they possibly could. They will hear more of this hereafter.

A good many Democratic Congressmen have been home to look after their fences and come back with tales of woe about the contemptuous talk of their constituents over the parsimony of the "five-cent Congress." Symptoms of Democratic revolt against Holman's miserly leadership are plentiful.

The mischievous "leave to print" to the Record what is not delivered on the floor of Congress has been abrogated; but not before Hnery George's extreme and rapid free-trade book was printed at expense and circulated as a Democratic campaign document under the franking privilege of Congressmen.

THE St. Louis Republic, a free-trade Democratic paper, says that "the passage of 'the cheap clothing bill' by the Democrats will save the people of the country $400,000,000 in the cost of clothing next year." By "the cheap clothing" bill the Republic means the bill putting certain classes of wool on the free list. Of course, the Republic knows that this bill has not and will not become a law, and therefore its assertion is an outright falsehood for that reason. But there is another reason why, if it could and should become a law, this assertion is false, and if the Republic does not know what this reason is, it is wofully ignorant. That is that there were only $338,000,000 worth of woolen goods of all kinds made in this country last year, and as woolen goods are the only ones that could possibly be affected by this bill, it is difficult to see how $400,000,000 could be saved unless the woolen manufacturers should give away all their products and add a bonus for having them taken.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST Episcopal Church which has just closed its session at Omaha was a most imposing and representive ecclesiastical body. It was composed of ministerial and lay delegates. The proceedings of these Methodist quadrennial conferences are always of intense interest, both because of the importance of subjects considered and the ability with which they are discussed Methodist preachers, as a rule, are trained debaters, and the polemical struggles which call forth the best parliamentary frequent display of the finest specimens of impassioned eloquence, afford to the younger ministers of the church the source of a liberal education in all the requisites of proficiency in their profession. The late conference will report the enormous sum of $4,517,048 raised during the last quadrennial period for the cause of foreign missions, an unprecedent amount, indicating that, whatever changes of spirit and method may have transpired among the Methodist hosts, they still retain the original missionary inspiration of their famous founder, who cried, "The world is my parish."

Why Florida Republicans Fail to Vote

Florida is a Republican State, but it is represented in Congress by two Democratic Senators and the same number of Democratic Representatives, while it has given since 1880 four Democratic votes in the Electoral College. A large majority of the Republicans in Florida are colored men who were given freedom and suffrage by the Republican party, and most of these colored Republican voters are concentrated in a few counties. How the State is made Democratic is shown by the following figures, giving the vote in four counties in 1884 and 1890:

	Dem.	Rep.	Dem.	Rep.
Leon	834	2,198	1,206	60
Duval	1,889	3,357	1,805	284
Marion	1,064	1,168	1,126	265
Escambia	1,806	1.861	1,461	102
Total	5,623	8,584	5,598	711

In 1884 the Republican vote in these counties was 8,584, and the Republican majority was 2,961. In 1890 the Republican vote was 711, and the Democratic vote within twenty five as large as it was in 1884, giving a Democratic majority of 4,887.

No one pretends that the Republicans were not as strong in these counties in 1884. Democrats from Florida will tell you: "Oh, these niggers didn't care to vote." And that is true. No one in the North would care to vote if the penalty was a load of buckshot from behind some tree, or a band of men at night taking the voter out of his cabin, administering a hundred or more lashes and then putting a torch to the cabin.

But some one will say: "The Republicans are in the majority. Why do they submit to this?" The answer is: "because they are poor, unarmed and unorganized. while the Democrats are armed and organized." What do Northern Republicans say to it?

IF there is one thing more painful than another in a campaign year it is a Democratic campaign song, and one appearing in the St. Louis Republic is possibly more painful than any yet appearing in the epidemic of 1892. It is voluminous and virulent and among other things it says of Republican editors:

"With men who cannot write the truth with a bribe before their eyes.
And journals without principle employed to print their lies."

and follows it with this about other Republicans (presumably not editors):

"They dwell in costly mansions, filled with all that gold can buy,
While their victims live in garrets without beds on which to lie;
In fine luxuries they revel, with costly wines and meat,
While the poor in shanties gather with insufficient food to eat."

Now if that isn't a case of "men who cannot write the truth" and a journal without principle employed to print their lies, what in heaven's name is? It is an undeniable fact that the "victims who live in garrets" and the poor gathered in shanties with insufficient food to eat are not the employes of protected industries, but, on the contrary, are either the employes of narrow-minded free traders in the cities' who haven't the ability or business sense to expand their industries to a point of competition with foreign manufacturers in the same line sufficiently to warrant the extension to them of Protective principles. or are foreigners not yet energized into independent, active Americans. Nine hundred and ninety per cent. of them live in cities: the same percentage is ignorant and stupid; the same percentage votes the Democratic ticket, when it can get its vote and all of them are better off, bad off as they are, than they were in their own free trade or low tariff countries. The American workingman is the highest and best specimen of his class in the world, and as long as he is sober and industrious he does not live in a garret without a bed to sleep on, or in a shanty with insufficient food. If the Republic's song writer isn't a liar and the Republic an accessory after the fact all rules of evidence might as well be expunged from the code of legal practice.

How She Knew Them.

"I'm a Democrat, marm," said the tramp at the kitchen door to the cook, "and I want something to eat."

"Come off," she replied, tartly, "you're no Democrat."

"But I assure you I am," he insisted

"And I say no," she asserted, reaching for the broom. "If you'd been a Democrat you would have asked for something to drink.

DURING the speech delivered by Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, in favor of free wool, that gentleman said:

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Joseph D. Taylor] says "Abel was a keeper of sheep." This may be true; but, Mr. Chairman, it is nowhere recorded that Abel ever asked protection for his flock in the shape of a high protective tariff law.

MR. MCMILLAN. There was no Republican party at that time.

MR. RICHARDSON. That is true.

The reason that there was no Republican party at that time was that the founder of the Democracy had just started his party by fooling the inhabitants of the Garden of Eden just as their Democratic leaders of the day are trying to bamboozle the workingmen of the country now. Sad experience had not yet taught them the true inwardness of Beelzebub's own party. Full particulars of the acts of this old, original Democratic leader can be found in the third chapter of Genesis, whilst the record of the first bull-dozing Democrat can be found in the fourth chapter of the same book.

EFFECT OF BELLEFONTE LIFE UPON OUR COUNTY OFFICERS.

As they come to Bellefonte. { As they return after three years residence at the County Capital.

What Protection is Like.

Protection is like a good book; once in your hands you want to hold on to it.

Protection is to workingmen what flowers are to bees; it enables them to store away the fruits of their labor for future emergencies.

Protection is to labor what a solid abutment is to a bridge; a safe and sure foundation on which to rest.

Protection is as necessary to the growth, development, and elevation of labor, as the sunlight is to the flowers.

Protection is no respector of persons; it even extends its blessings to Democrats.

Protection is like a king; it confers dignities; it dignifies labor.

Protection is like a mother; it gives nourishment to industries.

Protection is like sun warmth; it cheers and gladdens the hearts of the poor.

Protection is like a valuable jewel; once you have it in your possession you do not like to part with it.

He Didn't Read the Papers.

I had been talking to him for ten minutes, when I happened to mention a recent occurrence noted in the papers.

"I hadn't heard of it," he said.

"Why," I replied, in surprise, "it's in all the newspapers and has been for a week."

"But I don't read the newspapers."

I actualiy jumped, the confession startled me so.

"Well, what kind of a man are you?" I blurted out.

"A Democrat," he said, with a blush; and I hadn't another word to say.

AFTER NOVEMBER.

The Democrats will rise,
By and by,
To mansions in the skies,
By and by,
Unless, oh, tale of woe,
They precipitately go
To the regions down below,
By and by.

A Fable on the Times.

The Clevelands and the Hills were at war with one another, and the Good westernman stepped in and endeavored to separate them. But both of the contestants cried out: "We would rather perish in the contest than be reconciled by you," and they jumped on the Good westernman with both feet.

NO G. A. R. FOR THEM

The bill was up to name a sum
By act of legislation,
To give the G. A. R. boys in blue
A Washington ovation.
And every Southern Democrat
Stood up before the bar
And voted straight against the bill
To help the G. A. R.

The Chinese Fairly Treated

This nation is to be spared the disgrace of the brutal anti-Chinese legislation proposed by fanatics on the Pacific coast.

The bill which House and Senate conferrees have agreed upon and which is said to be sure of passage by the Senate which branch vigorously disapproved the original total exclusion bill, provides for ten years more of the present partial exclusion; and to this added certain provisions. There aim to correct abuse of bail privileges, provide for registration by Chinese laborers, and enact the penalty of imprisonment and return to their native land for Chinamen attempting to enter this country unlawfully. This bill is a vigorous measure, so much so that Senator Sherman and Mr. Hill, though they will not oppose it, declined to sign the conference report.

Yet there is cause for national congratulation. The abhorrent provision for absolute exclusion is eliminated, and the bill makes war on none save the competitive labor class. It is a relief to feel that the crisis is past. So rashly did the Democratic House put through the Geary bill on its earliest presentation, that the country naturally feared the disgraceful inhumanity it proposed might be enacted before public opinion could be aroused.

The breeze Mr. Grey succeded in stirring up has put the Chinese problem in a clearer. light John Chinaman hasn't stood so well with the American people since Mr. Burlingame called this country's attention thirty years ago to the valve of Chinese trade.

Nashville's Shame.

Lynching in remote Southern districts' apart from railroads, ihave ceased to attract attention; but such a horrid butchery as occured in the streets of Nashville' the capital and leading city of Tennessee week before last may well alarm people and suggest the failure of government in Southern States. The Negro victim deserve death, that may be; but for an insane mob, recruited from many adjoining towns, to be able to overcome the entire police force to delay the interference of the Governor himself, to not only lawlessly hang their victims, but to beat and stab him on the way to the place of death- a more unhealthy incident for a community can hardly be imagined. It is immoral in its effect on the people especially the young; it fires all the bad passions in the human breast; it cultivates a contempt for established law, and makes succeeding out breaks logical and easy Gov. Buchanan is a weakling, as shown in his vacillating feeble conduct in the troubles among the East Tennessee miners. The dispatches indicate that had he and the local authorities taken hold promptly after the outbrak—as a sheriff did in Brimingham' Ala, a few years ago when a dozen would be lynchers including the postmaster, were shot down in the streets there might now be order in Nashville a respect for law in Tennessee, and freedom from disgrace of a savage crime.

An Invasion Of Charity.

Another relief ship, carring 6,000,000 pounds of breadstuffs and provisions, is on the ocean enroute to the starving peasants of Russia. It is by vessels like this that America invades the ports and captures the hearts of the Russian people.

It is a conquest for peace and charity, more splendid and enduring than all the triumphs of armie.

Questions for Republicans to Answer.

In view of the fact that Republican patronage has been so bestowed as to build up an excess of Democratic newspaper circulation it is time that a few important questions should be pressed on all earnest Republicans. While Democrats rarely patronize Republican papers great numbers of Republicans take Democratic papers regularly and give them liberal support. They will, no doubt, continue to do so. Republicans are disposed to read both sides and listen to what the opposition has to say, and while no objection may be made to this practice in itself it is certainly time to protest when such patronage of the Democratic press is accompanied with neglect of Republican papers. It may be, of course, that some Republicans are so thoroughly informed that they can learn nothing from their local Republican papers, but such instances are certainly rare. Much of the ablest discussion of political questions comes from the country press. The papers nearest to the people often speak with the greatest weight and give the soundest instruction. As the most powerful agency to promote the success of the party and to inculcate and preserve patriotic principles the local Republican papers in every locality merit the generous support of earnest Republicans. Take Democratic papers if you choose, but not to the neglect of those of your own party.

Let every Republican put himself on the stand and propound such questions as these:

Do you make any effort to induce your friends to aid in extending the circulation of local Republican papers? Do you advertise in such papers as freely and as fully as your circumstances and the nature of your business will permit?

Is your friendship for the Republican press active or passive? Are yon aware that the Republican party has been put at a great disadvantage through the failure of Republicans to give liberal aid and support to the Republicen press?

SOME of the densely ignorant calamity howlers are charging that the Treasury is bankrupt and that the administration has been driven to the desperate and unlawful expedient of extending the four-and-a-half per cent. bonds. Of course, all people who are informed in regard to these matters know that the law under which these bonds were issued provided that they should become redeemable at the pleasure of the Government in large or small amounts on and after September 1, 1891. Since that date the Treasury has had the option of redeeming them to any extent it saw fit, but was not required to take up a single one. The bonds simply became "subject to call," and, as the law intended, the Treasury was put in a position where it could pay a part and carry the remainder of the bonds and retire them from time to time whenever it could do so to the best advantage. But the Department has been able to do even better with these bonds than the law contemplated. While it was not expected by any one that the entire issue would be redeemed as soon as made subject to call, it was thought that while they continued to run the four-and-a-half per cents would draw the full rate of interest. Instead, however, the Treasury continued over $25,000,000 under agreements reducing the rate of interest from four-and-a-half to two per cent. Subsequently they were redeemed in large amounts and comparatively few are now outstanding—less than $2,000,000. Such good results were possible only because of the enlightened, farsighted policy which reserved all rights to the Government and put it in a position where it could not be cornered or coerced. And yet ignorant creatures attack this creditable piece of financiering and expect sensible people to listen to them while they display their stupidity.

SECRETARY RUSK'S latest proposition for co-operation is in reference to experiments with various kinds of cotton plants, his interest in this particular work being heigthened by the fact that the imports of raw cotton into this country, which were comparatively infinitesimal a few years ago, have grown with marvelous and threatening rapidity. Only a few years back the imports of Egyptian cotton into this country were so trifling as to hardly attract attention; and even to-day, no doubt, many people will be surprised to learn that we import any foreign cotton whatever, and yet, during the last fiscal year, the imports of Egyptian cotton into this country aggregated over 22,000,000 pounds, a marvelous increase during the past five or six years. To take time by the forelock, Secretary Rusk proposes experiments on a large scale with foreign cotton seed, to be supplied by the Department to the experiment stations in the several States where cotton is grown successfully. His propositions to these stations has been greeted by them with enthusiasm, and they will conduct trials, not only of Egyptian cotton but of other varieties, notably the Peruvian, of which a large quantity of seed was recently received by the Department and distributed in accordance with the Secretary's plans. The object will be utterly to destroy dependence upon any foreign country for any portion of our raw cotton, it being believed that whatever qualities any of the foreign varieties may possess distinct from our own and which cause a demand for them among the manufacturers, can, as the result of careful experiments, be produced on our own soil. In view of these facts, do Southern cotton growers intend to go on clamoring for free trade generation after generation?

The Southern Convict Lease System

The country is but little aware of the enormities of the Convict Lease System in the South. Kennan, the traveler, lately startled the public with the horrors of Siberian prisons, yet under our own eyes a system but a shade less barbarious exists.

The convict lease system is maintained in twelve States. It is simply traffic in human blood and muscles. That a group of penal systems cruel, brutalizing and deadly by their own showing, should live in the midst of our human and charitable institutions. seems unbelievable; yet its truth cannot be denied. The question is, shall it continue? Our own safety forbids it

What we have of good in the way of institutions, State or National, are the results of watchfulness and the suppression of wrong. We have a corrector always at hand, if appealed to and aroused. The sense of justice, the human instincts, are the influences in our civilization that beat down all opposition. Enlightened public opinion is the death of every wrong. Aroused, it demolishes the evil as light overthrows and beats down darkness.

It is the High Court of Appeals to which political parties must be brought, in the last resort.

Two propositions cannot be refuted.

First. That the present convict lease system is the shame and degradation of the State—a great public wrong. It is inhuman and brutal. it is injustice itself. it in inflicts a punishment upon the convict not imposed by the sentence of the court.

It violates the law of the land under the pretense of enforcing the law. Finding itself in the posession of a human being, it has put aside law and humanity, and wrings out of the convict all the profit his life will bring. it increases enormously the death rate. It is the surrender of the State of its functions for so much money. The State under this system, puts aside the duty it owes to society to make an effort for the convict's reformation. It takes bread out of the mouth of the honest workingman and degrades labor. It shames the enlightenment of the age. It is a relic and a legacy of the cheap slave labor system.

Second. It is a Democratic wrong kept in its place by the Democratic party. It is a Democratic alliance with crime, upheld by the bayont.

The proof of this is to be found in the fact, that the system exists to-day and is upheld by the Democratic States and Democratic influences. Ten Democratic States, out of twelve convict lease States, stand solidly behind it.

Another Tin Plate Factory

American workmen should take notice of the number of tin plate works being erected in this country. They mean work to wage earners in various lines of industry from house building for factories and home to finishing the tin plate itself. The firms of Morewood & Co, of Swansea, Wales, which has just determined to transfer its buisness here, locating at Elizabethport' N, J, is the fourth Welsh firm to come across the Atlantic in the last ten months. The factory to be erected at Elizabethport to have a capacity of 5,000 boxes of tin plate per week.

The new tin plate tariff did not take effect until July 1, so that it has been in operation only ten months. Yet in that time over thirty factories have begun turning out tin plate for the home market and as many more are now completing their preparations. Those who have been deluded by the free trdde cry against American tin plate should think what these new factories, constantly being added to. mean to American labor and what a big addition they are to the weekly American pay- roll.

What Was Overheard

Mama. I know the gentleman's name that called to see Aunt Ella last night and nodody told me either."

"Well then what is it Boby?"

"Why, George Dont. I heard her say Geyrge don't, in the parlor four or five times hand running. That's what his name is."

—The Bellefonte Central Rail road station at State College has been completed and is now occupied by the company employees.

Valerie;

OR,

HALF A TRUTH.

BY "THE DUCHESS."

Poor Mrs. Langley! It was a bitter pill to swallow, to find that she had so terribly blundered; and to be told point-blank by Max Beauregard, although he spoke gently, that she was a worldly-minded matchmaker. But still, there was the consolation that Valerie would, after all, be the mistress of Abbot's Leigh. It was not her (Mrs. Langley's) success, but it was success—triumph.

Lady Elinor could hardly be expected to rejoice very much, but she dared not express to her brother-in-law any doubt of Valerie's veracity; nor did she venture to hint her opinion that Mrs. Langley was improving on the truth when she said Valerie's letter to Aston Lawford was sent before the girl knew of Gerald Beauregard's illness.

"Of course," Lady Elinor said to Angela, "there is no difficulty about falling in love with Max—I dare say Valerie did that: the question is, would she have married him before he became the head of his house?"

"So," wrote uncle Will to his niece, "you are not coming to Welford, after all, and you are going to marry Colonel Beauregard. I am very glad to hear that: he is a splendid fellow, and none the worse for being the owner of one of the finest properties in England. I am sure you will be happy; of course I shall be delighted to see him, and I have some new kinds of ferns to show him—but you mustn't ask me to give you away. Your aunt will do it much better, and it would distress me to take part in grand affairs like that!"

"I dare say he would not know what to do," said Beauregard, laughing, when Valerie showed him this letter, a long one for uncle Will; "and those ferns! He has never forgotten my supposed interest in ferns, and I know nothing about them. However, I shall be duly appreciative when the time comes!"

About writing to Louis, Valerie had at first hesitated, but finally decided to do so and explain everything. His answer, when it came, brought the tears to her eyes. Some bitterness of feeling he showed, as was only to be expected, but he was truly glad to find that she was not what she had made herself out to be. Beauregard had acted nobly throughout; no man better deserved the happiness he had gained. In time he (Louis) hoped he would be able to meet Valerie again; but it must not be until he could think without pain that she was Max Beauregard's wife—and that could not be yet, for years to come. But Max smiled a little to himself when he read this; Louis would get over his trouble sooner than the young man supposed now.

"Well," Aston Lawford said, when he heard the announcement of Valerie's engagement, "the girl has got all she played for. I wish her joy!"

"It is my opinion," observed his sister, "that Max Beauregard loved her all along; and very likely she was fond of him, only she wouldn't have married him while he was comparatively poor!"

"Just as well, then, she refused me. I don't want a wife who would flirt with another fellow!"

Of course "society" had various opinions: many declared that Beauregard was "infatuated," to strike his colors at last to a girl who had so openly jilted another man for him; the men did not at all wonder at this "infatuation;" others said there was more in it than appeared, and hit the truth, or very near it; but everybody talked about the approaching marriage, and discussed it with as much interest as if it vitally concerned their own happiness.

It took place in London, in November, and St. Peter's Eaton Square was brilliant with glittering uniforms, on which the sun of "All Saints' summer" shone brightly; and surely lovelier bride had never stood at the altar than the "Fairy Queen," in her "sheen of satin" and white flowers, but not a single jewel; and the scarlet and gold lace of the bridegroom's splendid uniform gave picturesque contrast to the cream-color of the bride's robes. There is certainly this advantage in a military wedding, that the bridegroom, especially if a handsome man, is not put "out of court," as in ordinary cases. But Max Beauregard never thought of admiring eyes as he passed down the nave with his bride; nor did Valerie even hear the subdued murmur of admiration that greeted her, though she bore herself calmly: she saw nothing but a mist of color, knew nothing but that she was with Max Beauregard, and belonged to him now.

The wedding took place in London.

And when they were alone together in the carriage, and he took her hands in his and drew her toward him, she trembled, and flushed and paled in a breath.

"Fairy Queen!" he whispered, folding the slight form to his heart, and kissing the soft lips, "my Fairy Queen now, my worshipped wife!"

"Oh, Max!" the sweet voice faltered, almost failed, "I am afraid—I feel as if I could never be worthy of your love!"

"Heart of mine!" he answered, with a tender smile, but a touch of the quizzical look she knew so well, "is not the fear too late? But, darling, it is a needless fear. Let me be as worthy of your love as you hope to be of mine, and all will be well. Have we not both the perfect love which casteth out fear?"

"Yes, Max; forgive me!"

"I will forgive you, Fairy Queen—so!" and once more he pressed his lips to hers, with that kiss which seals the "noblest troth," which feels the first kiss, and forebodes the last.

THE END

A COTTAGE BY THE SEA.

Mr. Landon, ex-cotton-spinner, had good reason to hate the army. His eldest daughter had married a gallant young hussar, who quickly spent her fortune at Newmarket and thereafter vanished from the world's ken, leaving her neither widow nor maid. His eldest son—a great scamp, as the sons of steady business-men often are—entered a dragoon regiment, got into some discreditable row, and tried by court-martial, dismissed the service, and shot himself through the head the next day. His second daughter, Clara, was cruelly jilted by a guardsman, and died at Bournemouth a year subsequently of a broken heart. A second son—at Woolwich—was blown to pieces by a shell which exploded in his hands while he was examining it; and last, but not least, his one remaining child, his ewe lamb, Lily, evinced a remarkable prepossession for the military. The Grand Duchess of Gerolstein was not fonder of soldiers than Lily Landon; but then she only saw them at a distance, never at close quarters. This idiosyncracy was made all the more distressing to Mr. Landon from the circumstance of his residing in a garrison town, which is a seaport as well. He could not prevent Lily seeing soldiers and officers going about their duties, nor could he abolish the regimental band which always made Miss Lily's blue eyes sparkle, and caused her unconsciously to assume something of the audacious demeanor of a vivandiere. All he could do was to engage a distant relative as a duenna; but under a homely exterior this old lady concealed a romantic disposition, with a singular belief in what is now derided as chivalry. The Barsetshire Regiment, alias the Royal Bombardiers, was quartered at Barmouth at this time, and an exceedingly lively mess was one of the distinctions of the regiment, two-thirds of the members being young Irishmen. It was currently reported that these young gentlemen, of good family, but slender means, were the plague of the Adjutant-General's life, so frequent were the complaints and grieviances that arose from their racing, rowing, rat-hunting, and other proclivities, and that the Commander-in-Chief himself had threatened to honor the two worst scapegraces of them all with the distinction of a court-martial. The two in question—the head and front of all this offending—however, took life riotously, and were, indeed, on the high road to Avernus, when the following incidents occurred: They were close allies, these two; so much so that they went by the name of Castor and Pollux in the regiment—nicknames that will do just as well as their real ones, which are those of a noble Irish family. Lieuts. Castor and Pollux, then, were walking down the High street arm in arm, with very large cigars in their mouths and very small bull-terriers at their heels, when Nick, alias Castor, felt an electric thrill, so to say, from the arm of his pal Dick (Pollux), and, from previous experiences, at once concluded that there was a pretty girl around. So there was, and a benign old lady wreathed in smiles also.

"By Georze! What an exceedingly pretty girl," quoth Nick; and "Looks very solvent," said more practical Dick.

"Let us follow them and find out where they live."

The two ladies, who had evidently been making some trifling purchases in town, had turned their faces in the direction of the suburbs and were now walking along the seashore, the younger with a white, fluffy poodle-dog in her arms. The officers followed them at a respectful distance, but the bull-terriers were in earnest in their endeavors to make the acquaintance of the fluffy poodle. Perhaps this accounted for one of the ladies' knowledge of what was going on behind them.

"Let us ask them to call off their dogs," said Lily; "I am sure they are officers of the Bombadiers."

"Not for the world, not for the world, my dear," replied the duenna; "not that I have any doubt about their gallantry, the chivalrous sense of honor of these brave men who die for their country, and for England, home, and beauty; but think what your papa would say with his singular antipathy to warriors. O, no; never! let us hurry on, or they may perhaps be too assiduous in their devoirs."

They did hurry on to the haven of a pretty bijou cottage in red brick and stone gables, standing among laurels in its own grounds, and a stone's throw only from the sea, into which there jutted a boat pier, with a boat at the end of it. The two ladies disappeared through the green gate, but Castor managed to catch a Parthian glance of a pair of very bright sapphire blue eyes, while Pollux was saluted with a series of barks from the poodle, who now, believing himself at home and safe from terriers, struggled violently in his mistress' arms in the vain pretense of desiring to annihilate them both at once.

"A doosid neat little crib," observed Pollux, staring up at the bow windows. "Just the kind of little box one would like to dawdle away a summer in, if one had £3,000 a year, instead of only a thousand farthings."

"Yes; and with those two eyes to rival the billows," mused Castor, who was sentimental, comparatively speaking.

"I should think now," continued Pollux, "that it would not be unseemly to knock at the door and to inquire if Mr. Smith lives here. That would tell us who the charmer is, at all events."

"Capital! Let us enter forthwith."

But when the two young men knocked and rang the bell they became aware, to their surprise, of a great commotion within. There was a noise of a chain being put across the door, a hurrying of feet, and a clatter of fire-irons, and above all the din the poodle barked furiously.

"Officers!" someone cried in an angry voice. "On no account let them in!"

A window above the porch was now thrown up, and an elderly man, with a very long face and very white whiskers, desired the young men to be gone.

"Does Mr. Smith live here, sir?" inquired Pollux, with his best bow and most courteous manner.

"No, sir; he does not. This is a lunatic asylum, and I am a mad doctor. If you value your liberty you will be gone. No one is allowed to enter here, and especially no—faugh!—soldiers."

"Is the young lady a patient we just saw go in?" asked Castor, surprised.

"Yes, sir; she is. Mad as a hatter. Homicidal mania. Don't you ever attempt to speak to her, or she may cut your throat. Carries a carving-knife in her muff. Here, John, show these—hum—gentlemen out."

The window went down with a bang, and a tall footman, coming round from the rear of the house, politely escorted the officers to the gate.

"I say, John," quoth Pollux, twiddling a sovereign between the fingers of his lavender kids, "who is that old bloke, eh?"

John regarded the gold attentively with one eye. "That's Mr. Landon, hisself. Horful rich, but wulgar. He's made his money in trade, you see, so you must excuge him!"

"And the girl, John; what about the young lady?" asked Castor, excitedly.

"That's our daughter, a namiable but 'aughty young 'ooman. No followers allowed," said John, significantly. "Specially the millintary."

"But why, John—why?"

"Can't say, sir; I'm sure. I only state facks. Now, sir, I must go back. If Mr. Landon was to see me I'd lose my place. Thank you, sir, thank you, very sorry, but must lock the gate," which he did.

And they were locked out on the dusty road forthwith.

As Castor pensively turned homeward he saw something white, like a handkerchief, wave from a top window. His spirits rose with a bound, and, singularly enough, he never mentioned the circumstance to his dear friend Pollux.

Ah! if he had but known that this was only a frisky freak of Miss Vizard, the duenna, into whose head there suddenly came a phantasy of a distressed damsel in a turret, and ot two young knights attempting her rescue. The circumstance, however, was enough to fan the spark—the bolt from the blue—in Castor's bosom to a flame, while, as for his friend, he walked on rapt in contemplation of John's allusion to Mr. Landon's wealth and "wulgarity."

Next day—and next day, and the next—the two friends strolled down to Marine Villa, and smoked many cigars on the little pier, but to no purpose. No one came out of the green gate and no one went in; nevertheless they enjoyed a beautiful view of the drawing-room windows.

"It's not satisfying, you know" said Castor, "but it's better than nothing, seeing where she is."

"I tell you what, my dear fellow," said Pollux, "this can't go on nohow. I must have money, for the duns are all down on me in shoals, and my rejected progenitor is in the same fix as myself, since all his tenants down at Castle Pollux refuse to pay him the 'rint.'"

"Hang your filthy lucre! I only want her eyes."

"It strikes me, my child, that you are very far gone. But sitting here smoking won't do us much good in the way of either optics or rupees. The question is, how to get in?"

"I am sure she is kind-hearted," said Castor. "See how she hugged that poodle—lucky dog!"

"Come! That's good," cried Pollux. "Happy thought; let us test it!"

"How?"

"This way, sonny: You tumble into the water; here, off this pier; and I will plunge in and rescue you. Man overboard! Great sensation, you know! Gallant conduct! Carried into the drawing-room by John! Smelling bottles, brandy; put to bed! Bless you, my children, £20,000 down, and £20,000 more at my death! Old man now, and can't live long! Upon my word it's glorious," cried Pollux, enthusiastically.

"Except for one thing," returned his friend, sarcastically; "that you might drown here and be blessed, for anyone that would see you from the house."

"Now, my dear child, you are the veriest tyro I ever met. As if I have not seen the charmer peeping at us through the lace curtains at the center window this half-hour past. Looking at me, remember, not you, my boy."

"By Jove!" starting up; "you don't say so! Where?"

"There! You've gone and done it now! She's scuttled off like a mouse. That comes of wearing an eye-glass—you can't see."

"I can see that you have arranged this plot very nicely for yourself, my dear Pollux. I am to fall in, and to be the duffer that gets drowned, while you are to be the hero, the brave preserver, and so forth—no, thank you!"

"But think of the pity a corpse excites, and the brandy-and-water, and that blue-eyed charmer putting hot stockings—her own perhaps—full of salt, to your poof feet."

"Ay, my good Pollux, and of your whispering into her ears all the time. No, the sorra a bit of me will be the corpse. You may, if you like."

"Well, as you say yourself, it is better than nothing. I'll be the demd moist, unpleasant body, but it's no use to-day. There's a flutter in the dovecote, and we may just as well go home to lunch"—which they did.

The next day was Sunday, and there was only early church parade. The two young officers strolled down to the cottage by the sea, and having taken up their positions at the end of the pier began to smoke as usual. The bells were ringing for church, and the morning was a fine one in the merry month of May. Presently they saw a solemn procession from the green gate, headed by Mr. Landon, who in figure and features was remarkably like Mr. Hablot Browne's pictures of Mr. Dombey, in the novel of that name. Mr. Landon, Miss Vizard, two maid-servants, a coachman, a page, and John, the footman, with two out-door servants, formed the cortege. They all carried large prayer books, and were in their go-to-meeting raiment. Miss Lily was not there—nor the poodle. Miss Landon had developed quite a fondness for the sea of late, and was never tired of watching its varying moods—so like those of a woman—from her window.

"I say," said Pollux, when the procession had gone past some time; "there she is behind the drawing-room curtain. Fortune favors us, the house is empty; now is the time for our little comedy." So saying he walked to the very edge and looked into the sea. "But look here, chappie! It will never do for you to save me, for you would not have the nous to carry the farce through. Come, no hesitation, in you go;" and suiting the action to the word he sent Mr. Castor with a souse into the water. Miss Landon saw it all from the window, and so did the poodle. The latter barked disapprobation of the whole proceeding; but his mistress trembled with fear and excitement.

"Good gracious!" she said to herself, "are those two handsome young officers quarreling about me, and will there be murder? O, my!—no! See, one of them throws off his coat, and dashes his hat on the ground! He plunges into the boiling waves to save his drowning friend! The waters close over them! Brave man! O, dear; I can't stand this! Cook! Cook! Come here, run, run directly!"

The cook, a fat Irishwoman with a red face and reddish hair, came puffing and blowing to the foot of the stairs.

"O, cook, run quick and save them! Two officers! Drowning there at the pier! O, run, run quick, cook, please."

"Is it sogers they are! Bedad, thin, the divil a fear of them. Sure, an' indeed, I was coorted by a Sergeant meself, and sez he, sez he—"

But Miss Landon could not wait to hear honest Bridget's reminiscences. She sped out of the house and down to the pier, the poodle barking furiously in front and Bridget puffing like a female locomotive in the rear.

They reached the beach just in time to meet the two dripping officers coming out of the water. If Miss Landon had not been so excited she might have thought it singular that the drowned man was riding on the other's back, and that, though his eyes were shut, he seemed to cling vigorously to his friend's neck. But she neither noticed this or anything else in her efforts to emulate Grace Darling on that coast.

"O! I saw you fall into the water, I am so glad," she stammered inconsequently. "How brave it was of you; but will he die?"

Pollux shook his head meaningly—like Lord Bacon in the play.

"It all depends on prompt measures. If we could only put him to bed at once—now."

"O, bring him into the house. My name is Lily—Miss Landon, you know—and I'm sure papa will not be angry when it is a matter of life and death."

"'Deed thin, but he'd be a nagyur if he was anything else," said Bridget.

Chuckling at the success of his experiment, Pollux—who was a young athlete—ran his friend at the double into the cottage, while the two women followed at their best pace behind in much perturbation.

"Ye must put him into the master's own bed," quoth Bridget, who was the only servant left this Sunday in the house, "and give him plenty of rum and brandy. That's what cures the sogers, as Sergt. Heavystirn many and many's the time——"

"Take him up to papa's room. Up the stairs to the right. Can I do anything, sir? O, please tell me!"

"He should have hot stockings full of salt to his legs and feet," said Pollux gravely.

"Would Bridget's do?" she inquired, eagerly. "She wears blue wooleners, very warm and thick——"

"I think," said Pollux, shaking his head, "that Lisle thread, size sixes, would suit his complaint better."

She flushed, for she saw he was regarding her boots. After this, though anxious to be of every assistance, she did not seem to be very much afraid of fatal consequences from the accident.

In the midst of the to-do, while Bridget was cooking rum-and-water and lemons, and frequently tasting the mixture, in the kitchen, and while Castor was carefully tucked into Mr. Landon's bed by his friend, who had enrobed himself in Mr. Landon's dressing-gown and nether garments, the aforesaid procession returned from church. Lily flew down the stairs like a bird, but not quicker than the indignant poodle.

"O, papa, dear! Only think! They were all but drowned, when we saved them; that is, I and cook. O, wasn't it a mercy! The two officers! They are in your bed."

She burst into tears, as girls do under sudden excitement.

"Two officers, and in my bed!" exclaimed her father wrathfully. "What does this mean? Are you mad?"

"Indeed and indeed then she's not," observed Bridget to the astonished group. "And where should the poor crayture be, and he an illigant Irishman, a son of Lord Castor, as fine a man as ever stepped, that lived beyant the bog, if not in the best bed? And his friend, that's as good as a wet nurse wid him, and an Irish gentleman, too, as he told me himself, when he took the sup of brandy from me own hands. 'Mrs. Bridget,' says he, 'did yez ever hear of Sir Giles Pollux, of Castle Pollux?' sez he, and 'Begorra, sir,' sez I, 'that I did many and many a time;' 'and that's me own father,' sez he, and——"

"Will no one stop that infernal woman's tongue?" exclaimed Mr. Landon. "You have been most imprudent, Lily. Has not the army cost us enough already, without putting two officers into my very bed?"

"Only one, papa," she said, humbly, and looking down.

"Pish! Well, they shall get out of the house faster than they came in," he cried, and bounded up the stairs.

But even Mr. Landon was silenced by what he saw in his bed-room. The blinds were all drawn, and the room darkened. A young man with a curly head lay in his bed. His eyes were shut, and his face pallid. The latter was due, it must be confessed, to an application of violet powder from the toilet table. There were great black marks under his eyes—from a lump of coal in the grate—and Mr. Landon began to think that matters were really worse than he thought. Moreover, he had caught Bridget's reference to the nobility, and Mr. Landon, like many self-made men, dearly loved a Lord.

"Well, sir," he said to Pollux; "Here you are again?"

"Necessity knows no law," retorted Pollux, sententiously. "A glance at my poor dear friend there will show that there was no alternative but to bring him here."

"A son of Lord Castor's?" questioned Mr. Landon, after a pause, during which he eyed the bed attentively.

"Second son. Poor fellow, he is still unconscious."

"You are both in the army," said Mr. Landon, sourly—"a detestable profession, most abominable!"

SARAH.

Hurriedly Sarah Dunlap crossed the hall of her aunt's house in Bellefonte Pa, and stood irresolutely for a moment at the head of the old-fashioned staircase. Her hand moved a little nervously on the balustrade, and the line between her delicate dark brows deepened.

"If it were only over with—or needn't be at all," she reflected. But there was no way to avoid the unpleasant task ahead of her, and accordingly Sarah passed down the stairs and into the square parlor overlooking the garden, In about half an hour old Mrs. Dunlap in her room upstairs heard the front door close, and a quick step go down the garden pathway. Presently Sarah came back.

The old lady was popped up in bed and turned a pair of very bright, clear eyes upon her niece as she entered the room.

"Well," Mrs. Dunlap exclaimed with impatience. "Sit right down and tell me all about it. And don't oblige me to ask too many questions. You know how I hate to have to wring anything out of you."

Sarah laughed. "I'll do my best, Aunty," she answered, sitting down in the window and looking with gentle indulgence at the old lady. "I suppose I must begin at the beginning. I found Mr. Irvin, of course in the parlor and he fairly jumped at the business question."

"Humph, what'd he say?"

"Said that he would not think of disturbing you while you were ill but that it was very important for him to know when he could take possession of the house. He intends putting up the factory at once, he says. He observed that Mr. valentine had explained how fond we were of the old house and all that, but of course we could hardly expect him to be sentimental in a business matter."

"Did he talk like that right to your face, Sarah Dunlap?"

"Yes, Aunt—I can't say—well it didn't sound quite so bold; but those were his words?"

"Who does he favor in looks—the Benners, I guess." Mrs. Dunlap leaned back and closed her eyes a moment, visions of the high cheek bones and prominent nose of the Benners floating before her. Sarah thought of them too, sharply in contrast with the looks of her recent guest.

"He's not a bit like the Benners she said, presently. "I don't know the Irvins much," she added "Let me see he is not very tall—rather slight but looks strong and has a clean-shaven face."

"Handsome? Mrs. "Dunlap's eyes opened for an instant.

"Oh, no—not at all—oh no, not the least bit handsome; but he is as quick, bright sort of look."

"So he's going to put up a factory—dear, dear—I did not think—but well no—of course the property's his since your uncle Ezra'd do it. Always took for granted he meant it should be mine outright and—after letting me live here forty years."

"I said something of the kind to Mr. Irvin. He's coming back this evening."

"What for; he isn't going to build tonight, is he?"

"Oh, no. He wanted to see the garden very particularly."

"Well, you make it clear I want the plants."

When the objectionable guest had paid his second visit, Sarah came back to her aunt's room looking very much discouraged.

"Well, what now?" demanded the old lady with scorn.

"He says we can't have those gardens disturbed. Aunty," said Sarah, sitting down dejectedly. "I took him down to the arbor, and we had a very nice talk at first. I really almost liked him. We began about country life, and he told me how much he had longed for a real country home—a place something like this, he said—then he asked who took care of the garden, and I told him I was your gardener, and how much we both loved the flowers- I showed him the tree planted when I was a baby, and then the rosebud for my tenth birthday; and he said that he should think we'd hate to leave it all—then I explained you wanted the plants; but he said oh, no! they were part of the property."

"Benner straight through and through," declared the old lady, "Grasping all they can get. I will have the plants, though; I guess Ezra's will had nothing to say to them."

"I could scarcely be civil after that,' pursued Sarah, her face flushing in the dusk. "I changed the subject, and asked him how nearly he was related to the Benners; but he said it was very distant. He told me where he lived as a boy, somewhere near the Old Fort, and he was a very visionary, unpractical, enthusiastic kind of man. I guess he didn't provide much for the family. Anyway Mr. Irvin says he started out young in life to carve his own future, and he has been quite successful—only he intends to be thoroughly so, he says, if possible."

"By way of my garden. Humph!"

"He says he enjoys obstacles. He likes something to conquer. I told him I had no fancy for battlefields; he said a skirmish was as good as a success to him. Oh, Aunty by the way, do I look like the Benners?"

"Well, some," said the old lady; reluctantly. Sarah crossed the room and in the faint light regarded her face attentively in the long narrow mirror. It was a thin, clear cut face, rather shadowy as to what might not be its owner's strong or weak points; the face of a girl to whom events or emergencies were unknown. Life had written almost nothing upon it that gave it charm, and the eyes were a pretty hazel with black lashes and delicate brows.

"The Benners," pursued the old lady, as Sarah sat down again. "You do look some like them Why?"

"Oh, Mr. Irvin said I had a Benner look," the girl answered. "He tried to make out we are cousins."

"Well, you are—twice removed. His mother's your cousin, I think."

"I must ask him. He'll be back in the morning, he says."

"Well, I declare to gracious the man means to force me out of this bed, I believe. Sarah, you must speak up and not let him impose upon you."

About eleven o'clock the next morning very unsual sounds floated up to the old lady from the parlor where Mr. Irvin was again "interviewing" Sarah. Some one was playing on the old piano; then a man's voice, a clear, fine tenor, could be heard. The song was one the old lady remembered in her youth: "Phyillis is my only love"—and her withered cheek flushed with pleasure.

"Sarah," she said, directly her niece appeared, "did you ask that young man to sing? I want you should inquire if he knows another piece like that.

Sarah's eyes were very soft and bright

"Aunt," she said eagerly. "would it look bold if I sang a duet with Mr. Irvin? He's coming back this afternoon."

"What'll you sing? you don't know what you're talking about, Sarah"

"Does he think the piano's his?" demanded the old lady with a sudden return of severity. Sarah looked miserable.

"He says it is, Aunt," she admitted.

There was an ominous silence; then Mrs. Dunlap closed her eyes again.

"Well, is was Ezra's" she admitted."

It was with mingled feelings that she listend that afternoon to the singing sfrom below. Love of music compelled her ot

Making Glad the Waste (Waist) Places.

"That's what I call making glad the waist places," said Smithson, as he put his arm around a lady's waist. But Lilly won't care much for this show of affection if Smithson doesn't get rid of that disagreeable catarrh of his. Won't somebody tell him that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure him.

By its mild, soothing, antiseptic, cleansing and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh in the Head, as thousands can testify. "Cold in the Head" is cured with a few applications. Catarrhal Headache is relieved and cured as if by magic.

In perfect faith, the makers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy—the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., offer to pay $500 to any one suffering from Chronic Catarrh in the Head whom they cannot cure.

Now, if the conditions were reversed—if they asked you to pay $500 for a positive cure you might hesitate. Here are reputable men, with years of honorable dealing; thousands of dollars and a great name back of them.

They believe in themselves. Isn't it worth a trial? Isn't any trial preferable to catarrh?

Lamp-chimneys cost so little that we let them go on breaking. We go on buying and grumbling.

What should we do?

Get Macbeth's "Pearl-top" and "Pearl-glass;" they are made of tough glass, tough against heat; they do not break in use; they do from accident.

They are fine, well made, exact; they fit the lamps they are made for; stand upright; the shade is right; they make a right draught for light; they are uniform. Both bear a label for your protection. Look for it.

Republican Reciprocity Did It.

In 1890, during the eight months ending February 28, the exports of lard from the United States to Cuba amounted in value to $1,349.070.

In 1891, under Republican reciprocity, during the corresponding period, our exports of that article to that country amounted in value to $1,962,852.

This increase of $613,782, or 22 per cent., was caused by Republican reciprocity.

In 1890 the import of tobacco into the United States amounted in value to $18,399,735.

In 1891, under Republican protection, our imports of tobacco amounted in value to $8,298,619.

Thus Republican protection enabled the tobacco growers of Maine, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri and Arkansas, the sixteen of our States in which tobacco is grown, to supply this difference, amounting to $10,101,735.

In 1891, during the eight months ending February 28, the exports of crude and refined petroleum from the United States to Cuba amounted in value to $237,619.

In 1892, under Republican reciprocity, during the corresponding period, our exports of such articles to that country amounted in value to $277,464.

This increase of $139,845, or 59 per cent., was caused by Republican reciprocity.

In 1890 the imports of agricultural products into the United States amounted in value to $56,088,496.

In 1891, under Republican protection, our imports of agricultural products amounted in value to $26,498,003.

Thus Republican protection enabled the farmers of the United States to supply this difference, amounting in value to $26,590,493.

In 1891, during January and February, the exports of wheat flour from the United States to Cuba amounted to 14,386 barrels, valued at $77,310.

In 1892, under Republican reciprocity, during the corresponding period, our exports of that article to that country amounted to 118,421 barrels, valued at $542,948.

This increase of $104,035 in barrels and $455,630 in value was due to Republican reciprocity.

Republican Reciprocity Did It.

In 1891, on the first day of January, the total exports of the United States to Brazil for the nine months then ended, and to Cuba and Porto Rico for the four months then ended, amounted in value to $15,576,378.

In 1892, under Republican reciprocity, during the corresponding periods our exports to those countries amounted in value to $19,592,359,

This increase of $4,015,981, or over 25 per cent, was due to Republican reciprocity.

The Democratic House wants to reduce the duty on binding twine, which has come down in price from

17cents a pound

in 1878 to

in 1891. Any sensible farmer can see that a duty which increases production and reduces prices is a good duty for the consumer.

In 1890, during the year ending June 30, the production of wool in the United States amounted to 232,500,000 pounds.

In 1892, under Republican protection, during the corresponding period, this country produced 285,000,000 pounds of wool.

This increase of 52,500,000 pounds, or 22.6 per cent., was caused by Republican protection.

In 1891, during the eight months ending February 29, the imports of iron and steel manufactures into the United States amounted in value to $29,820,502, and our exports of such articles to $18,823,384.

In 1892, during the corresponding period after the benefits of Republican protection had begun to be felt, our imports of such articles amounted in value to $16,326,207 and our exports of them to $20,473,764.

Thus Republican protection caused this increase of $1,640,380 in the value of such exports and this decrease of $9,356,738 in the value of such imports, thereby making our exports of such articles exceed the imports for the first time in the history of the country.

In 1890 there were imported into the United States 11,962,752 dozen eggs, valued at $1,584,089.

In 1891, under Republican protection, our imports of eggs amounted to 4,263,375 dozen, valued at $533,407.

This difference, amounted to $1,050,592, was put into the pocket of the farmers of the United States by Republican protection.

Spring Fever

The gradual opening of the budding trees and the shooting upwards of the blades of grass are signs of the advent of spring the farmer is already at work stimulating the growth of his crop by fertilizers to insure a rich harvest. Nature needs stimulation and why should not man? The system needs building up after the attacks of Grip and cold, and the only tonic is pure whiskey. Max Klein, of Allegheny, Pa., has the endorsement of eminent physicians, certifying to the purity of his famous Silver Age and Duquense Rye Whiskies. Sold everywhere at $1.50 per full quart. Six-year-old Penn Rye Whiskies absolutely pure at $1.00 per quart or 6 quarts for $5.00. Send for catalogue and price list of all kinds of liquors to Max Klein, 85 Federal street, Pittsburg, Pa.

DIDN'T NEED HIM.

A poor lost Democrat knocked at the door of Hades and Satan opened it.

"What do you want?" he asked

"I want to come in," said the wanderer.

"Who are you?

"I am a Democrat."

"Not Dave Hill?,' queried Satan, eyeing him sharply.

"No, sir," very humbly.

"Of couse not. I know Dave, but its rather dark here and your answer threw me off. I'm sorry, but you can't come in."

"Why not?" pleaded the applicant. "I'm freezing."

"Because we've got an overwhelming majority already and don't need you. Go up to Heaven. You'll be lonesome there and out of place, but you'll get used to it by and by, if you'll only hang on long enough. Ta ta," and Satan shut the door in his face.

Drunkenness, or the Liquor Habbit Positively Cured by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific.

It is manufactured as a powder, which can be given in a glass of beer, a cup of coffee or tea, or in food, without the knowledge of the patient. It is absolutely harmless, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. It has been given in thousands of cases, and in every instance a perfect cure has followed. It never fails. The system once impregnated with the Specific, it becomes an uttor impossibility for the liquor appetite to exist. Cures guaranteed.

48 page book of particulars free. Address Golden Specific Co., Race St., Cincinnati, O.

THE May Century will be specially interesting for its verse from the frllowing writers: Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Louis Chandler Moulton, Edith M. Thomas, Maurcie Thomson Julian Hawthorne, Herman Melville (some posthumots verses accompanied by a sketch by Arthur Stodman), Frank Dempster Sherman, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, James Herbert Morse and Richard Watson Gilder.

Ought such a Syst em to Exist?

A local item in the New York Press of recent date states that a widow by the name of Laura Hanson, who supported three little children by washing and sewing in a fourth floor back tenement, having fallen nine days behind in her rent, was turned out on the sidewalk. The children were all girls, the oldest nine, the youngest two. There was nothing noteworthy about the item. It was one of a hundred similar ones that appear from day to day, and one of a thousand that do not get into print at all.

An item in a New York paper of the same date stated that the daughter of Hugh McLaughlin, the so-called boss of Brooklyn, had been obliged to construct a burglar proof vault in her residence for the storage of her wedding presents, which amounted to over a quarter of a million of dollars in value.

Is any one so fatuous as to believe that a social system under which such disparities of condition exist, can long continue? Is any one so wicked as to wish that it should continue?

I HAD FAITH.

Abont six months ago I was advised to consult Mrs. Hall, the great spiritualist doctor, to see if she could cure me of scrofula, from which I have suffered from childhood. She said if I would have faith in the medicine she gave me that she could cure me. I took her medicine and in less than three months I was cured. Why, the way the medicine worked was a miracle. I begged of her to tell me what the medicine was made of, but she said she could not do so. Finally she told me the medicine was Sulphur Bitters, and that she never knew it to fail in such cases as mine.—Mrs Clara Knowlton, Boston, Mass.

A BOON FOR ALL.

If you are sick and have not been helped why do you not write a full description of your case to the great specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 W. 14th Street, N. Y., known everywhere as the discoverer of Dr. Greene's Nervura, and who is without doubt the most successful physician in the cure of all long-standing complaints?

Consultation in all cases is entirely free, personally or by mail. Thousands consult him by letter, and he returns an answer to all perfectly explaining their diseases, giving advice, etc., without charge.

His success in curing diseases by his marvellous vegetable remedies is simply wonderful, and he has made a specialty of the cure of persons at a distance through letter correspondence and treatment. In this manner thousands of people have been and thousands more are being cured, and we should advise you, if you desire a sure cure from your disease, to immediately write him all about your case. It will cost you nothing to get his very valuable advice.

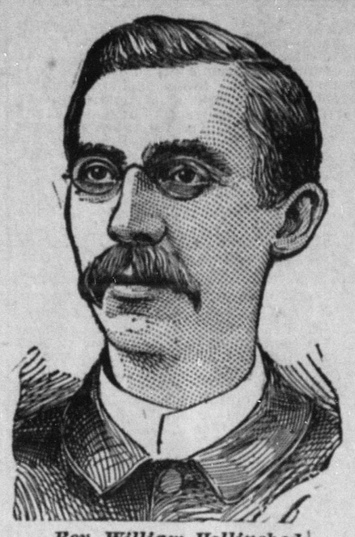
I have been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad, could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep and had to walk the floor. I purchased a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely, it is working a sure cure. It is the medicine above all others for catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. It is curing my deafness.—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.



Rev. William Hollinshed

Of Sparta, N. J., voluntarily says:

"To Whom it May Concern:

"Unasked I deem it my duty to a suffering humanity whose bodies and souls I would have healthy, to tell them of the value of Hood's Sarsaparilla. While living in Ohio one of my children was greatly

Afflicted With Boils

having 30 on her limbs, and being unable to walk. I had heard of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and bought a bottle, half of which cured entirely. Two years after, another child was afflicted as badly. I used the other half bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla with like results. About four years after, the child first afflicted was again tormented like Job, and I bought a bottle (on Sunday at that) and again a cure. I gave some of the medicine to a poor woman and two children; they were helped as were mine. Through a testimonial sent to C. I. Hood & Co., inquiries came from all the country, asking if it was a 'bona fide' testimonial, and of course I wrote all that it was, and have the knowledge of

Of persons helped or cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Mild cases of rheumatism have yielded to it. Biliousness and bad liver have been corrected in my own family. This is the only patent medicine I have felt like praising. I speak not for C. I. Hood, but for the Jobs who are impatient and are tormented beyond endurance. Nothing I know of will cleanse the blood, stimulate the liver, or clean the stomach so perfectly as

THE CAPRI GIRL

HOW CAPRI WOMEN ARE SO HEALTHY.

The Women of Capri are the healthiest in the world. The secret of their wonderful vigor is work, plain diet and constant life in the open air. "Nerves" are unknown.

Women of our own country have injured their nerves by wrong diet and a shut-up, indoor life. Thousands feel just ready to drop from nervous weakness. It is what makes so many nervous, tired, languid, without energy or ambition. They have headache, stomach trouble, kidney and liver complaints, constipated bowels, malaria, headache, palpitation, poor blood, etc., which are caused by weakened nerves and nervous prostration.

The Grip also, has left as an after effect, more weakened and shattered nerves and more physical debility and prostration than any other known epidemic.

These difficulties are always increased and greatly aggravated in spring, by that Spring Debility which so weakens and enervates us all. But all these troubles are curable by the great tonic and restorative for women, Dr. Greene's Nervura. A perfect condition of nerve vigor and strength always follows its use, and thus women can secure as strong nerves and vigorous health as those of Capri. No woman should fail to use Dr. Greene's Nervura in Spring if she wishes to keep strong and healthy. Purely vegetable and harmless. Druggists, $1.

"I was suffering from nervousness, caus] by female weakness and nervous prostration. I was so nervous and weak I could not go up a common pair of stairs without stopping to rest, and troubled to sleep at night. I took Dr. Greene's Nervura, and have obtained my old elastic step around the house, to the surprise of my friends. After creeping round for two years, hardly able to do anything, it has proved a boon to me truly. MRS. OLIVER WILSON, Northboro, Mass.

Dr. Greene, the successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases, 35 W. 14th street, New York, can be consulted free, personally or by letter. Call or write to him about your case or send for symptom blank to fill out, and a letter fully explaining your disease, giving advice, &c., will be returned free.

That Ball Game

There was to have been a game of base ball played last Saturday on the diamond in Bellefonte between the High School and the Academy boys. The nines were to be compo sed of the following named gentle men:

HIGH SHOOL.

Harper, c; Houck, ss p; Kelley, 1st base; Miller G., 2nd base; Hastings, 3d base; John Miller, ss; Runkle, l f; Houck F. centre; Heylman, c. f.

ACADEMY.

Dorworth, C. c; Hughes, J. p; Brew, 1st base; Hoy, E· 2nd base; Hughes E. 3d base; Furst, ss; Garmam, l f; Cartin, c f; Shirk, r f.

The reaaon the game failed to materialize last week was because the day was showery and the academy boys had just got new suits of clothes and did not care to tarnish them in their first game. They say that they will play for sure next Saturday. No doubt it will be an interesting game as the players are all good.

"I Am To Tired"

Is a common exclamation of this season. There is a certain bracing effect in cold air which is lost when the weather grows warmer; and when Nature is renewing her youth, her admirers feel dull, sluggish and tired. This condition is owing mainly to the impure condition of the blood, and its failure to supply healthy tissue to the various organs of the body. It is remarkable how susceptible the system is to the help to be derived from a good medicine at this season. Possessing just these purifying, building-up quaities which the body craves Hood's Sarsaparilla soon overcomes that tired feeling, restores the appetite, purifies the blood, and, in short, imparts vigorous health. Its thousands of friends as with one voice declare "It Makes the Weak Strong."

John, have you seen that woman lately?

John, in astonishment, what woman?

The Voice of the People on Wine

It is a well known fact that wines above all other liquors are grossly adulterated, but when a pure article is placed on the market and people find it out to be pure, they all with one voice recommend it. The Port Grape Wine from the vineyards of Alfred Speer, of Passaic, N. J., has received the unqualified endorsement of the medical fraternity and of thousands of invalids who have been won back to health by their use. For sale by druggists.

I AM AN OLD MAN.

Shall be 76 years of age next June, and for the last six years have suffered from general debility and old age. At times I could not get out of bed without help. I commenced to take Sulphur Bitters. In a week I felt stronger and got a mighty fine appetite. I still continued their use, and to-day I walked over three miles without feeling tired, something I haven't done in five years before. Sulphur Bitters is a right smart medicine.—George Brown, Keokuk, Iowa.

SARAH.

enjoy keenly the way in which Sarah and the audacious Mr Irvin sang "I would that my love" and "Oh wert thou in the cold blast." Whiler esentment againstwhat she felt an unjust will depriving her and her niece of her cherished home made her consider everything done or said by Mr. Irvin objectionable, yet somehow she found herself looking forward eagerly to her niece's next report of their unbidden guest.

"He is going to be married soon, aunty," Sarah related· "Perhaps that is why he is in such a hurry about the house. He's been telling me about the young lady.

"Well upon my soul. Seems to me he's very free with his confidences. Married? What'd he say about her?

"Oh, I dont know exactly," said Sarah; "he said she was the kind of girl I'd get along quickly with; it seems, ever so long ago he made up his mind never to marry any one but her."

"Well, and were there any of those obstacles he talks about?" sniffed the old lady.

"Oh, yes. But he says there's quite a touch of romance in the whole affair. He's a very—well, masterful sort of person, Aunt. I can quite understand what he means when he says he enjoys overcoming difficulties. He isn't the sort of person any one could trifle with easily."

"I guess I will when I get around. What with the garden and the piano and the dear knows what all— I'll be great ful if he leaves us the clothes to our backs. What else'd you talk about?,'

"Oh, a great many things. Books some. He's fond of German—and, oh, I mean to tell you, he's coming tomorrow morning and going to read a little German with me." Well, Sarah, you just see here. Let that young man know you've something to do besides fool around with him. I know; he wants to force me up. I'll see Dr. Harris I guess before he gets me out of the house.'

"Oh, Anut! It's just because he wants, he says, to familiarize himself with the place"

"Well, he's got all the time there is after we're gone. I want you should be very distant with him—and, Sarah, I guess you'd better not begin any German readings."

During Mr Irvin's next visit Sarah appeared in her Aunt's room with a very anxious expression.

"Aunty," she said with an effort at composure, "Mr. Irvin has brought the German books, and I dont know what to say about it—I"—"Well go on," said the old Lady, "I suppose you're bent on it any way and perhaps he'll help you some."

She lay very still when she was alone, sometimes with her eyes open, but generally keeping them closed as pictures from the past, and visions of what might be a head of her floated through her brain, and the peculiar cruelty of her brother's will smote her heart afresh. When she had been left a widow forty years ago, her husband's brother had promptly bade her stay on in the house which had seen the happy years of her married life, and which had been endeared to her by a hundred different associations; when the sorrows it had witnessed consecrated the place almost as tenderly as its periods of joy, while from the time she had brought her little neice Sarah home a new interest was given her life, yet one inseparably bound up with the old mansion. Ezra's will fell like a thunderbolt upon the old lady and her neice. Indeed there was little question but that it caused the weak turn which confined her to her room and as she lay there now faintly concious of the oice from below, something like a wish never to leave the old home save for a final resting place brought a hot moisture into her eyes,

It seemed a long time before Mr. Irvin went away. When the door had closed upon him at last Mrs Dunlap alert for every sound, heard Sarah lingering on the stairs. Presently the girl appeared.

Her cheeks were scarlet. "Well," demanded the old lady "what now?"— what new thing he is going to claim?"

Sarah's color now swept all her face

"Oh, aunty" she said" it's all as queer as queer can be, Oh, if you'll only let me. Please—oh Aunty it seems Mr. Irvin made his mind up right away, the very first day, he says—and he never wanted any thing so much before—"

"Sarah Dunlap," said the old lady, sitting upright," What ails you? Speak English."

"Oh, he's asked me to marry him. Aunt, said Sarah;" that's it; and he says I mustn't say no—he made all that up about going to be married—or rather, he says he was bound to make me say yes."

Mrs Dunlap remained rigid in the same attitude for a monent without speaking.

Sarah flushed and paled and flushed again.

"What'd you tell him?" at last demanded the old lady, with an accent of fine scorn. She was very proud of Sarsh's conquest. She knew all about young Irvin and was well aware how highly he was esteemed.

"Oh—he says it's settled," observed Sarah; "and of course—he was only going on, he says, to try me about the factory and the garden and the piano; he says, bless your heart and he wouldn't take a thing belonging to you more'n he'd steel."

"Only-.my girl," said Mrs. Dunlap grimly.

But when Sarah bent to kiss her there was a kind of tenderness in the old woman's embrace that the girl remembered only when she was a little child.

CHEAP CONVICT LABOR.

White Laborers in Tennessee Made Desperate by Competition With Comvicts —Some Fruits of the Democratic Policy of Cheap Labor and Free Competition.

The mining region of East Tennessee is the wealth and opportunity of the State To the man of money and the man of muscle it offers a hopeful outlook. This mountain region is noted for the independ ence of its people. From Sevier's time downward, they have been proud that slavery could not live among them. These convict stockades, born of the lessee system, have been a growing menace to gainful occupation, and an offense to the natural sense of right. The association of free and convict labor is in every way unnatural. The free miner may live in a cabin, but he is as free as the winds that blow through it. Freedom loves freedom. His bread lies at the bottom of the mine. The faces of his rosy mountain children he does not see much of but by lamplight, yet all day his occnpation compels him to toil with the convict, face to face, for companion. At nightfall, when he comes to the upper region his day's work is weighed up in convict lease scales, by convict guards and rated by convict's wages. All the surroundings are most repulsive: armed guards everywhere; the clank of chains; the zebra clothes; the foul-mouth language of crime, whippings, tortures, and shooting, such as can hardly be described, fill the air.

Is it possible, is it probable even, that the man who deposits his free ballot to make the laws of this country, elects a Governor and Legislature, who shoulders his musket when that country calls to arms; is it likely that he will submit long to this order of things? Put yourself in his place before you answer; would you do it? Bread he must have; his occupation is mining. There is no place to fall back to, and the things that runs him out here, the convict and the lease, can follow him through ten Southern and two Northern States. He reasons the matter over! He was here first; he is not to be blamed for having been born in the mountains. Somebody's management has brought this about. The convict is not to blame; the clanking of his iron-fettered feet tell him that. Who is behind the convict? The "lease." And who made the lease? The State. Is he himself not a part of the State? Then he can unmake it. It is right to do it; so the hot feeling of indignation telegraphs itself from the bosom of one free man to that of another. One little wrong after another keeps building the feeling stronger and the fever of discontent rises higher. Governors, legislators, and lessees are common men.

The time for action comes. The Governor sits in his chair at Nashville grasping that $100,000 lease, dreaming of coming elections. The telegraph brings him word that the guard at the mines has been overpowered, the torch applied, and in the glare of its light every convict has been told to take care of himself. He hurries forward to quell the rising insurrection, and to save the "net revenue." After him hurry a few hundred boys who, in order to play soldier on holidays, have enrolled themselves as "State Militia." They have been called out. They catch up muskets and Gattling guns, and follow him. The charred and burning camps greet their arrival. They are put in camp at the stockades, and ordered to defend the lessees' property. A hundred thousand dollar lease is involved in this thing. Some of the escaped convicts have been captured and brought in. The boys, whose noble duty it is to defend the lessees' slaves, find themselves suddenly in the dark ness of morning, surrounded by men who had not played soldier, but acted it on many a crimson battlefield. Surrender or die, is the stern demand. One or two of the outpost civic guards already had been shot. The numbers are overwhelming. Sensibly they hand over their guns, are placed on the cars, and sent by the miners to find their Governor. Other stockades are similarly treated. The woods and mountains are again filled with convicts. The Governcr with pale face this time more sensibly sends for his Attorney General to hold a parley with the miners. Eight hundred convicts are prow ing over the country for food. In some places houses and stores are sacked. Everywhere in that section fear and horror prevail. It is no holiday affair now. The miners with compressed lips demand, as their ultimatum, that the Governor call together the Legislature and recommend the undoing of the "lease with them." They say "it is a matter of bread and life; with the State it is neither." The scales of Justice, not "convict lease" scales, must weigh the matter. The Governor bows obsequeously and goes in search of the Legislature. The Legislature meets and answers the demand of labor by an appropriation of $25,000 for the "Army of Tennessee" to shoot down free miners. The State military expenses already incurred have to be paid, the lessees indemnified, the whole sum footing up half the amount of the "net revenues." The matter drifts on toward the close of the year. The lessees refuse to pay the quarterly dues of "net revenue" and point to their burning stockades. The State totters on the brink of commercial dishonor and bankruptcy, and has to borrow money to pay three per cent, interest on a debt, already repudiated by the Democratic party one-half.

A FABLE OF THE FACTIONS.

A Lion named Grover and a Bear named Dave seized upon a Kid at the same moment and fought, fiercely for its possession· When they had fearfully lacerated and ripped each other up the back and were faint from the Factional Fight, they lay down exhausted from fatigue. A Fox, who had gone round them at a distance several times, saw them both stretched on the ground and the Kid untouched in the middle, ran in between them and seizing the Kid walked off with it in his vest pocket. The Lion and the Bear saw him, but not being able to get up, said: "Woe betide us, that we should have fought and belabored ourselves only to give the snap away to a Fox."

MORAL: The name of the Fox was "Some Good Western Man."

Safety in the Midst of Danger.

This would seem a contradiction—is so, in fact, to the eye. But experience has proved its possibility. Take the case of the individual who dwells in a malarious region. A robust constitution is no certain defence against the dreaded chills. What is? Recorded testimony, covering a period little short of half a century, proves that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is precisely this. This continent does not limit the field where the medicine has proved its efficacy. In South America, the Isthmus of Panama, Mexico, everywhere in fact where miasma-born disease takes on its most obstinate and formidable types, the Bitters is a recognized specific in illimitable demand, and prescribed by physicians of repute. Potent, too, is it in disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, and against that destroyer, lagrippe. It improves appetite and sleep, neutralizes rheumatism and kidney complaint.

"Yes, and many surrounding circumstances point to his identification. The young man I speak of is just the age Earl Arlington's son would be; his name is George Arundel; his attendant's name is William Bladon; for years he has been wandering over America with his father, who died a year ago; and at the present moment he is in Brooklyn at the house of a friend of mine."

"Great heavens, man, do you know what you are saying?" Horner gasped, almost breathless at such astounding news; "but, you must let me call my wife in—she's got a head on her shoulders and will set us right about it. Why, if this young man be—Martha! Martha!" The fat landlord couldn't wait to finish his sentence, but hurried to the door to call in stentorian tones for his better half.

She came. A tall, handsome old woman, much older than her husband, her hair as white as snow, and wearing a black shade over one of her eyes.

It was not an unkindly face, but there was a startled, pained expression in it which attracted Harry's instant observation. She looked like one who is expecting some impending misfortune to happen, and is in daily dread of the blow falling.

Remembering Wanda Arlington's description of just such a person and that she associated her with affectionate reminiscences, he resolved to be more candid with her than he had been with her husband, who was now in a very excited manner pouring into her ears the story he had just heard from the young American.

"Ah," she said with a sigh, "how you startled me. I thought it was of the little girl you might have heard."

"And, perhaps, I bring you news of her too, Mrs. Horner," Harry said.

The color left the woman's face in a moment.

"Of the lady Wanda?" she asked, "of the sweet, babe we—but, John Horner go down and attend to the customers; it will never do to leave the house untended."

Honest John was loath to obey her behest, but in this case the gray mare was evidently the better horse, for she peremptorily ordered him to go and he dutifully went.

"Now, sir, we are alone," she said, "and for heaven's sake, keep me no longer in suspense."

Harry Evesham told his story, watching with interest the strange fluctuations in the woman's expression as the details developed.

When he had finished, he handed her Wanda's portrait.

"How—like—what—her—mother—was," Mrs. Horner sobbed, devouring the picture with her eyes.

"Then you are sure of her identity?"

"As sure as that I am sitting in this chair, sir."

"And, will you help me to prove that identity?"

"Will I? Oh, sir, I thank the good Lord that He has sent you here to give me the chance to do so."

Mrs. Horner was trembling violently, and tears were running down her cheeks—there was no doubt of her sincerity.

"Eh, but I have been a wicked woman, and dearly have I paid for my evildoing," she sobbed.

"Pray be calm, my good creature," Harry interposed. "Repentance and restitution—"

"Aye," she cried, wildly, "now for repentance and restitution!"

"My story is a long and a sorrowful one; will you hear it?" the worthy landlady asked, controlling her emotion with difficulty.

"Most gladly," Harry declared, overwhelmed with the turn affairs had taken.

"It seems to me but the other day," Mrs. Horner began, "that I went as waiting-maid to the hall, yet it is nearly forty years ago—a pretty young woman I was then, though trouble has wrinkled my face now—and John Archer, the under-coachman, began his attentions to me before I was there a week. This was just prior to the death of the first Lady Arlington, and soon after this event, Archer and I were married and went into housekeeping at Willington. We had one boy, who was the idol of my heart, and his father, too, loved him even more than he did me; but the poor fellow never lived to see him a man, being killed in a runaway accident thirteen years after our marriage, when I returned again into my lord's service, which my Willie also entered as page-boy. Then the earl married again—this time far below him, the match being violently opposed by his son, Lord Arundel, then just come of age. I was taken as my lady's own woman, and so got to know more about the affairs of the family than the other servants. All went well until after the birth of the newly-married couple's first child, a little boy whom they christened George Archibald, when they began to quarrel, chiefly over a friend of my lady's who came to live at the hall."

"Mr. Paul Hayter?" Harry asked.

"Yes. What do you know of him?" Mrs. Horner queried in much surprise.

"But little—pray proceed."

"Well, from the day of the coming of this Hayter there was trouble."

"Was the earl jealous?"

"I think so. Now, in his younger days Lord Arlington had been a very gay man, and it appears that he had contracted a disreputable secret marriage with a French adventuress which he managed to conceal, the young woman dying most opportunely at an obscure village in Italy. When he insisted on his wife dismissing Hayter, they turned upon him with the revelation that his first marriage was known to them, that his first wife had not died as he supposed in Italy, but had lived till after his marriage with the daughter of the earl of Newton Solney; that consequently that marriage was null and void, Lord Arlington had been guilty of bigamy, and Lord Arundel was illegitimate. They had plenty of proof for their statements. The appalled nobleman, conscience-stricken and heart-sick, yielded to every demand they made. Lord Arundel was to be informed of the true state of affairs, to give up the title and all claim to the estates, receiving a large present sum of money, Hayter was to be privileged to make his home at the hall, and in the course of time her own child, George, was to succeed to title and estates, though not drawing attention to the scandal by assuming the title of courtesy' until a sufficient number of years had elapsed after Ambrose's disappearance to make the claim legal in the ordinary course of the law."

SHE PEREMPTORILY ORDERED HIM TO GO, AND HE DUTIFULLY WENT.

"Twenty-one years, is it not?" Harry asked.

"I think so, sir. Well, they had their own way in everything. Ambrose left his home heart-broken, the old earl passed a miserable, spiritless existence, his only solace his little baby boy, George, for whom he conceived an inordinate affection. Thus two years passed very miserably for all parties. You need not ask how I became familiar with these things, for I shall not tell you, sir."

"It is immaterial," Harry replied. "Do continue your narrative."

"Well, sir, at last little George took sick, and my lord was racked with anxiety. I never saw a man take on so in all my life. He would not be comforted. But I forgot to tell you that my lady took the most unnatural dislike to her child, for even a tiger loves its offspring—but I suppose that was because her husband loved it so. Little George grew worse till the crisis was reached, when he gradually recovered, but with the loss of his sight. Just three months after the little sufferer had got about again, there was a terrible scene between the earl and my lady, which ended in Bladon, my lord's own man, knocking Hayter down and half killing him."

CASTING SHEEP'S EYES AT THE HANDSOME PAINTER.

"Served him right, I should say," commented Harry, with a hearty approval of William's prowess.

"So we all thought, though it was as much as our places were worth to say so. Well, after this you may be sure that Lord Arlington could not remain in England, for his vindictive wife swore that she would cause his immediate arrest. I don't believe she ever meant to go to such extremities, but simply thought to frighten him, but he took her threats in earnest and fled, carrying his darling boy with him and accompanied by his faithful retainer, William Bladon.

"And Wanda."

"You shall hear. Of course my lady was mum as a mouse as to the true state of affairs and all the county called at the hall to express their sympathy, even those who had held aloof before on account of my lady's origin, but publicity did not suit her book and she declined to receive anyone."

"Playing the role of a wifely martyr, I suppose?"

"Yes, sir. Now just four months after the earl's departure, Wanda was born. Then, see what happened. Will you believe it, sir, but that woman hated that poor little child with an aversion that was sickening—aye, loathed it from the very hour of its birth?"

"What a wretch!" Harry burst forth in honest indignation.

"You may well say so, sir; for her conduct towards it became so brutal that even Hayter interfered, and I can assure you, sir, that he is not one to evince sympathy for the suffering of another."

"Did his remonstance do any good, Mrs. Horner?"

"Yes. The baby and I were removed to the Dower house."

"The Dower house?"

"Aye, a fine old-fashioned stone mansion about half way from here to the hall. You will see it if you go up to the hall to-morrow—stands in a fine garden, laid out in the Dutch style, after the manner of the grounds of the king's palace at The Hague, I've been told."

"With a very high porch approached by stone steps?" Harry interrupted.

"Whoever told you that, Mr. Evesham?" the landlady asked in surprise.

"Wanda—our Wanda across the ocean—when she described you to me, Mrs. Horner—for the old house and yourself were the only objects of her early life that clung to her remembrance."

"Now, God bless the little golden haired darling, and did she remember me?" the woman asked, deeply affected.

"She did; but do go on with your story, if you would serve one you apparently loved so much."

"Well, sir, somehow or other Mr. Ambrose—who ought to have been Lord Arundel, you know—got to hear of his sister's ill treatment."

The woman wept bitterly. To turn her thoughts Harry asked: "Is Lady Arlington now at the hall?"

"She is. But I have not told you all about her. Strange to say, during the past year, she has changed so that she is but the shadow of her former self—her old arrogance is gone, her beauty fled—she goes about the grounds like a ghost."

"Contrition?"

"Abject remorse. If it were not that Hayter holds her in a hand of iron, she would confess to the world her base sin. As it is, she is treated in her own house as a harmless lunatic, guarded by the creatures that wicked man has secured to do his bidding; for he rules house and estate as though he were the lord of it."

"And does no one interfere?"

"No one knows, sir. The servants are all Hayter's people; the gentry have no suspicion but that my lady's health has broken down under my lord's dejection; and there is not a more respected man in the country than Mr. Hayter—so proper, so sedate, so regular in his attendance at church—such a paragon of perfection."

The woman spoke bitterly.

"One more question, Mrs. Homer. Did that first wife—I mean the one Lord Arlington married in secret—leave any children?"

"Pshaw, sir! that was only a cock-and-bull story got up by Hayter. She died, just as my lord supposed, within six months of her marriage."

"Well," Harry said, emphatically, "I think there was some poetic judgment in the suffering Lord Arlington endured, for he must have deserted his French wife."

"Nay! even in that he was more sinned against than sinning. You see he married her when he was a mere lad, before he succeeded to the title. She was a bad, dissolute woman, and left him of her own accord to share the fortunes of a previous lover."

"What a hellish conspiracy! Now, Mrs. Horner, you and I must try to straighten out this tangled coil. Do you think that you could contrive for me an interview with Lady Arlington?"

"It is possible, sir. But, if you will take my advice you will get the young lady here before you act. With her daughter by her side, I believe she would have courage to face even Paul Hayter. And, if the new lord—your George Arundel—came too, he would be a power to shield her in her efforts to free herself from the malign influence of that scheming villain."

"All that would take time," Harry objected.

"And it will be a work of time anyhow. The hall is guarded like a prison, and you have no authority to break the barriers. You had much better wait quietly here until your friends can join you."

"Would not my presence attract the observation of Hayter's servants?"

"Oh, no, sir; we have numbers of visitors in the summer months—anglers and artists and such."

"Then that settles it;" Harry declared, "I can daub a little on canvas, and sketching excursions will give me capital opportunities to get the lay of the land."

One difficulty, however, worried the young man, which was how to dispose of Dr. Forrester, whose presence would materially mar his plans. He decided at last to play a bold game, and wrote the learned gentleman as follows:

"My dear doctor, I have resolved to act alone in the Arlington affair. If you keep perfectly quiet and do not interfere I will see that you shall be munificently rewarded for the clew you gave me. Any interference with my plans, and I throw up my hand."

And when the doctor received this curt announcement he piously thanked heaven that his lot was not cast among those abominable Americans, who had no aristocracy and consequently no sense of honor and chivalry, but wisely resolved to bide his time for the present at least.

Meanwhile it was whispered among the servants at the hall that the stalwart young fellow, who so often was seen tramping over the estate with a camp stool and portfolio was an artist from London, who was boarding at the Arlington Arms; and more than one pretty farmers' daughter cast sheep's eyes at the handsome painter.

CHAPTER XX.

AT BROOKLYN.—HOPE FULFILLED.

Had the art of the healer failed him, or would George Arundel have restored to him the blessed privilege of vision?

It was a day of fearful interest to the occupants of the Brooklyn mansion—the day on which Dr. Jacobson had resolved to test the efficacy of his treatment. Since the hour of the operation the patient—how nobly the term fitted him, for never a word of plaint had passed his lips—had remained in a darkened room seven long days and nights, and now the bandages were to be removed and a curtain drawn aside to admit a few precious rays of light.

"OH GOD, I SEE!"

They were all there, breathlessly expectant. Even Dr. Jacobson's hand trembled as he untied the linen wrappings. As for the women, their hearts stood still with deep emotion.

Then the shapely head was lifted, a slight, amazed expression flitted across the noble features and George Arundel murmured, in a tone of ecstacy that thrilled the listeners:

"Oh, God! I see!"

And he alone could speak. Then the torrent of pent-up emotions broke forth in smiles and sighs and tears, and Mr. Hardcastle, in the abandon of his joy, and, let us hope, in the pardonable forgetfulness of the moment, put his arm around Mrs. Evesham's waist and absolutely kissed her, a proceeding which none—not even the widow—seemed to think out of place.

"You must not excite him," Dr. Jacobson said, reproachfully, whereupon all were still as statues.

Then George Arundel spoke in a low, soft, satisfied tone, and all leaned forward to hear his words.

"Now, which is Kate?"

Oh, how the girl's heart throbbed! Not for Wanda, but for Kate he asked!

And suddenly there stood before him the weeping girl, looking, even in the agony of the moment, radiantly beautiful.

"And Wanda—Sister Wanda!" he cried.

They made a striking group—the young man, his face illuminated with ecstatic joy, the maidens standing bending over him, their hands clasping his.

But Dr. Jacobson put an end to these transports, and after Arundel had been allowed a few words of congratulations from Mrs. Evesham, Mr. Hardcastle and Bladon, the sick-room was cleared of visitors and George Arundel was left to the repose his overstrung nerves so sorely needed.

Now, it was just five days after this memorable event that Mr. Hardcastle received from Harry Evesham the bulky letter which conveyed the story of his adventures in Derbyshire—the revelation of the mystery which had surrounded the birth and parentage of Wanda Arlington.

Recovering from the first shock of astonishment he at once sent for Bladon to come to his study.

"Sit down," he said, gravely, as the old servitor entered. "I have much to tell and ask you."

"No occasion, sir," Bladon answered. There was a cowed, dejected air about the man which Mr. Hardcastle had never noticed before. "I know what thee be a-going to say. Thou'st going to tell me that the young master must marry Miss Kate—well, her is as likely a lass as e'er another, an' I've nowt to say."

"I was not about to tell you any such good news. Now, Bladon, were you ever in the service of Lord Arlington, of Willington hall, Derbyshire?"

"Eh! Good Lord, what makes thee ask, sir?"

Then Mr. Hardcastle read Harry Evesham's letter from beginning to end. The old servant never spoke during the recital of the strange story. When it was finished his feelings broke forth:

"It is the hand of the Almighty. And my dead master, innocent after all of the charge they made against him! Aye, sir, George Arundel is the Earl of Arlington."

"But can you prove it, man?"

"Yes, his father left in my hands all his papers and testimonies."

"Then, ho for England and restitution, for his and Wanda's rights."

Wanda's rights! The phrase startled the old servant like an electric shock.

"I was thinking so much o' the young lord that I had forgot the lady. So that sweet maid is my master's own flesh and blood. Bless her pretty face, I always loved her like my own child."

"Why, you amazing old hypocrite, you have been plotting and planning against her for the last two years," Mr. Hardcastle burst forth in righteous indignation.

"Nay, there thou'st wrong. I feared the lass, but I always loved her. If I had'na thought the world of her, think thee I should have stood quietly aside an' seen Master George give her ten thousand dollars?"

"What, that money came from him?"

"Aye, sure it did. I found it out, though he did contrive to keep it so close, but his bank-book leaked the secret."

"Well, this is indeed a day of revelations," Mr. Hardcastle declared. "Though, as I suppose she really is his sister, it is perhaps as well the money came from him."

"And Hayter? We shall drop hard on Hayter, Mr. Hardcastle?"

"We'll try," was the grim reply.

Then Mr. Hardcastle enjoyed the delightful satisfaction of revealing to the other actors in this little drama the startling developments of Harry's letter. George Arundel was the least discomposed. He had so long felt that his father had moved in another sphere of life that he was somewhat prepared for the disclosure. Kate heard the news with sad and sinking heart, for the ties of this new position would take the friend she loved so far away. And as for Wanda, she vowed she would never give up America and Mrs. Evesham to be made a queen, much less a countess, while every nerve of her little body thrilled with gratitude to think that she could now in sober truth call her darling George her brother.

So they wrote and told Harry that as soon as George's health permitted the whole party would set sail for England.

CHAPTER XXI.

MR. HARDCASTLE VENTURES.

It is necessary now to account for the presence of the American party in England.

When Mr. Hardcastle revealed the contents of Harry's letter to the inmates of his house, you may be sure there was rejoicing.

And the very next morning, when he had settled himself in his study to write a long letter to Harry, he was visited by no less a person than Mrs. Evesham, who blushingly excused her intrusion.

"My dear friend," she said, when she had seated herself, "I have come to beg the favor of your counsel in a matter which I am quite incompetent to decide."

"Ah, pray command me." And surely, Mr. Hardcastle, there was no need for you to leave your comfortable armchair and assume a far less luxurious one, because it happened to be a few feet nearer to your interesting visitor.

"Well, sir, you see," the lady continued, "I have just been having a most extraordinary and unexpected interview with George Arundel."

"A pleasant one, I am sure."

"Well, I hardly can tell. Will you believe it, the foolish fellow has fallen in love with my Kate, and wants to marry her?"

"I will very readily believe it," Mr. Hardcastle responded. "And I think the young gentleman exhibits excellent taste. But what does the lady say?"

"Oh, I am afraid that she encourages him in the proposition. But, do you not see, Mr. Hardcastle, that this is impossible?"

"I don't, indeed."

"What, don't you see that, with this young man's prospects of becoming the Earl of Arlington, such a match would be—"

"Unsuitable? Not a bit of it. A well brought up American girl—the daughter of such a mother as you—is, in my opinion, a match for the proudest prince in Christendom."

"Then you think I should give my consent?"

"If your daughter's happiness is linked with his I am sure you should. George Arundel has in my opinion a patent of nobility grander than that granted by any king. He is generous, honorable and affectionate—what more would you ask?"

"You plead well for the young people, Mr. Hardcastle."

"Yes," he said. "And if I could only plead as well for myself, Esther Evesham, I should think myself a happy man."

The widow flushed scarlet, but never helped him with a word.

"I know it is madness for me to suppose at my time of life that I could win a woman's love, nor did I ever think that I should meet a woman whose love I coveted so much as I do yours. I believe that, if you could forget my years, and consent to share my life, I could make yours happy. You see, your daughter will be marrying this English lord. Harry will be mating with Wanda, and you and I will be left alone."

"Oh, it wouldn't be for that, Mr. Hardcastle, if I—if I said yes—but—" the widow stammered.

"But?"

"But, oh, I do love you with all my heart and soul. I think you one of the noblest men God ever made."

—William F. Pownell, of Marsh Creek, thinks he is the lucky owner of a gold mine. Hope that may be true. All we ask him for our good wishes is that he shall subscribe for the REPUBLICAN.

—A place called Bunnona, near Valentines works, bids fair soon to be a city. There were five boys born there in one week a short time ago and the best of it is they will all be good republicans. Good for Bunnona! try it again.

—"Punk" Tate, who has been home for some time to recuperate from injuries received at Cincinnati in the performance of his duties as an acter in a circus, started last Monday for Fort Wayne, Ind., where he will join Wallace & Co's circus.

—General Gregg, whom the Republicans elected auditor general last fall, took charge of his office last week Tuesday. Only one change was made, Capt. Bricker, of Jersey Shore, was appointed Corporation clerk to succeed Clerk Glenn.

—The tennis game played at State College between the classes of 92 and 94 resulted in a victory for class of 92 by a score of 6-0, 6-4. McKee and Atherton played for 92, Damon and Belt for 94. The playing on both sides was good, making the game very interesting.

—The Zion band will furnish music for Lodge No. 447, Sons of America, on Decoration day. This Lodge holds their meetings out at Valentines' works, it has about 90 members and is in a very prosperous condition. They will participate in the observance of Decoration day.

—We received this week a copy of the Evening Repository printed at Canton, Ohio, containing 46 illustrated pages showing the industries of that live town. Canton is the home of Gov. McKinley and the Repository is a republican paper and a live one, we should think, from the specimen before us; and Canton must be filled with live, earnest people or no paper would be justified in risking so much to show them up. Well all we have to say is the effort is first class.

—James Irvin Walker, of Boggs township, is urged as a candidate for the legislature by a "Republican" in the Gazette this week. We still say as we said two weeks ago, if the friends of Mr. Walker can do half that they claim they can do it will be the duty of the Republican county convention to place him before the people. His election would be a republican vote in the next legislature and a republican vote is a vote for good government, for progress, for the right all the time.

—Mr. Samuel Cherry, who was reported to last council meeting as not having paid his water tax and council ordered that liquid shut off from Samuel, now claims to have paid his tax and it is said shows a receipt for the same. It is very queer if the tax collector and council do not know who pays water tax or that they would proceed to the extremity of stopping a man's water supply without positive knowledge as to the facts. But if Samuel has a receipt for having paid water tax up in full, of course that settles the matter. But we have never known council to resort to extreme measures before until they had been annoyed beyond endurance.

THE END OF COURT.

Several Important Cases Decided Justly.

The first case tried on Tuesday afternoon of last week was that of Agnes Shoemaker vs Philipsburg School board. An action to recover salary for a full eight month's school term, the plaintiff having been compelled to resign after teaching but one month. The Court after hearing the evidence, instructed the jury to find a verdict for the defendants.

The case of George and Alfred Krape vs. A. Waler, cashier of the Millheim bank, now for the use of William Walker, was the next case called. The case was an action to recover the payment of two notes aggregating five hundred dollars. George Krape refused payment on the ground that they had been forged by his son, Alfred. The jury awarded a verdict in favor of the defendants.

The most important case of the week was that of Mrs. David Lohr vs. The Borough of Philipsburg, an action to recover damages for a broken arm sustained because of a defective board walk in that borough. The plaintiff was awarded a verdict of $958.69. This should be a lesson to all borough authorities to keep good pavements.

Valentines Rolling Mill Shuts Down.

For a long time there has been grumbling among the men who work at Valentines rolling mill on account of the wages paid. This discontent grew until there were not enough of men at work to make it pay for the company to continue and so last week the mill shut down for an indefinite time. We understand that the company will take this opportunity to make some much needed repairs after which, if the men come to terms, the mill may start up again. We always sympathize with the employes in a struggle for a fair division of the product of labor but there are always two sides to a question, and we have always believed that the Valentines were about the best men in the world to accord equal and exact justice to their working people. They and their ancestors have conducted the iron business here from the county's earliest history and if we take the testimony of their own men they have been just and even benevolent almost to a fault. This being their character, if we were in place of the men, we should be quite ready to believe them if they said to us, "you will have to work for lower wages or we shall have to stop." And if times were as dull as they have been for the last year we should say to them, "go on gentlemen; we can stand it as long as you can." We believe we know something of how the Valentines feel towards their employees; we believe they recognize their manhood; we believe they recognize their right to make the best contract they can for their own interest, that they have the interest of their laboring men very much at heart; that at heart they are more inclined to nationalism than any man they have in their employ; that they are more inclined to be just to their men than the men are to be just to themselves; that in any contest between labor and monopoly, where the cause of labor was just, they would be on the side of the men. Believing this, we should be just and honorable to them until we saw gre at cause to change our opinion. We say this without fear or favor to either side.

That Checker Tournament.

Last Thursday evening the first round in the great checker tournament at the Y. M. C. A. rooms was fought. The contestants were Al Garman against Dagget and Ed. Garman against Blackford. A large crowd was present to watch the progress of the games. Charles L. Gates, of the BELLEFONTE REPUBLICAN, was chosen as umpire. The result of the contest we give in the table below.

	WON	LOST	PER C.
A. Garman	2	4	33⅓
Dagget	4	2	66⅔
E. Garman	1	3	25
Blackford	3	1	75

The next games were played last Tuesday evening, the contestants being Mitchel vs. Blackford, Shaffer vs. Hughes; the result of this contest we give in another place. These players are the best in the town and when the tournament is finished we have a man we should like to match against the champion player of Bellefonte.

The second series of games in the checker Tournament at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., took place on Tuesday evening. Some of the players wanted the games played on Monday evening and it was so arranged, but on that appointment only two contestant appeared viz., Schaffer and Mitchel, the result was in favor of Schaffer. On Tuesday evening the players were Al. Garman vs. Emanuel Noll, W. L. Dagget vs. E. J. Swaverly. The result was as follows:

	WON.	LOST.	PER.
A. Garmam	5	0	100
E. Noll	0	5	0
W. L. Dagget	3	2	60
E. J. Swaverly	2	3	40

Oh! That Garter.

We started to read a local in the Gazette in which we found that the editors of that paper had "got onto it"—onto a garter with a gold clasp and made of silk. Oh, no! as we read on we discovered that they have only "got onto" the fact that a garter with a gold clasp and made of silk has been lost by some lady. They want the article returned to their office, then they want the finder to tell them what it is when they return it as these verdant young men pretend they would not know a garter if they saw it. If that is the case the finder had better bring it to the REPUBLICAN office because we have seen garters, lots of them. But then come off Bailey; you and Francis have worn garters ever since you were born.

CENTRE COUNTY DEATHS.

DIED.—Last Friday evening between the hours of five and six o'clock, Mrs. Catharine Cannon, aged about 75 years. The funeral took place from the Catholic church in Bellefonte last Sunday afternoon at four o'clock. The pall bearers were Michael Garver, Martin Morrison, John Howley, Richard McCafferty, Michael Hayes and John Curry. Mrs. Cannon lived on a farm about seven miles from Bellefonte She was born in Ireland and had but few relatives in this country, her husband had been a soldier in the late war and she received a pension from the government. Some time ago she received quite a sum in back pay which, as she was a very prudent person, it is supposed she died possessed of. It is well known that it was the intention of the old lady to bestow what little she might have upon a favorite nephew who might not inherit all except under a will. As she died quite sudden it is thought that she may not have made a will in which event there may be claimants in the old country who would be legal heirs. She could not have left a large sum however; in fact, not enough to make it pay for foreign heirs to put in a claim.

DIED—At her home two miles above Lemont on Eriday, April 29, of inflammation of the heart, Mrs. Catharine Musser. She leaves three daughters and three sons. One daughter is married to T. F, Kennedy who lives at State College; another to J. W. Houser, of Pleasant Gap, and the third to Frank Boal, of State College. The sons are William who lives in Philipsburg; Wallace, who lives at home; and West, who resides at Warrior's Mark.

She was born at Reading, Pa., and has lived in this county for about 40 years. The funeral was on Sunday, May 1, at Boalsburg.

DIED.—Last Thursday evening Miss Alice Palmer, of Potters' Mills. Miss Palmer was a young lady, a cousin of Miss Minnie, Walter and Frank Crosthwaite, of Bellefonte. The funeral took place last Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

DIED—At Julian Miles Wood of consumption aged 34 years. He leave one son. His wife died in March 1890. The funeral sermon was preached by Rev. John Craig of the U. B. Church.

Death of Two Children at Snow Shoe.

Few there are in Centre county that do not know John Uzzel, Snow Shoe, and few there are who have anything but kind words to say for the noble hearted fellow, many very warm friends he has who will sorrow with him in his affliction. Death has entered the home of John and Eliza Uzzel and taken from them its light and joy. On Feb. 29, 1892, Christina, aged 4 years, 8 months and 10 days; on April 25. 1892, John Hastings, aged 2 years and three days, died, and were burried in the Askey cemetery. Rev. M. L. Jackson officiated at the funerals. Death comes to all the old, middle aged, the young, and when it comes it tears assunder the tenderest ties of this world and we mourn for awhile and refuse to be comforted. The death of the young seems especially sad. We have built such fond hopes on their future that their loss comes to us with crushing weight; these afflicted parents will never forget this sad event in their life history, and only time can blunt the point of their sorrow. We mourn with them, we sympathize with them in their hour of deep distress.

—Every town, indeed, is largely dependent for its prosperity upon the trade which it derives from the surrounding country, especially if it is not a manufacturing town and there can be no doubt that it would be money well expended for towns to aid liberally in building fine country roads which would serve as feeders to these centres of population. And not only make fine roads as feeders to the town but remove such obstructions to travel as the toll gates. The business of Bellefonte is seriously obstructed by the toll gates which are on every avenue of approach to the town. We have been surprised that the people of Bellefonte have so long endured this nuisance. If you ride ten miles out into the country it costs as much for toll as it would cost to ride on the railroad. Although our people have not seemed in the past to consider this subject yet it is really a serious matter and without question keeps much trade away from the town that with free roads would come here.

—W. F. Musser, son of Samuel Musser, of Fairbrook near Pennsylvania Furnace, returned home from Jefferson Medical College about two week ago where he has been fitting himself for the profession of medicine. He stood at the head of his class at College and has made a brilliant record. He will practice near his old home. A weeks ago last Friday his friends tendered him a surprise. The Pennsylvania Furnace band was present and gave him a serenade. The party were furnished with an excellent repast, congratulations and enjoyment took up the time to a late hour.

THE REYNOLDS' PRIZE.

Awarded Miss Teats for Excellence in Elocution.

Last Tuesday was an important day in the Bellefonte High School, it being the day of the contest for the Major William F. Reynolds' gold medal prize offered to the student who would excel in elocution. Quite a large assemblage gathered in the High School room to hear and witness the contest. Lack of space prevents us from giving a program of the exercises in full. The contestants for the prize were David Kelley, Maggie Teats, Gussie Stover, Harris Heylman, Rufus Strohm, George Miller, Grace Lukenbach and John Miller. All the speakers did very well, but of course, some one of them had to excel. This one the eminent judges chosen for the occasion, namely, J. C. Meyer, E. R. Chambers and W. E. Gray, Esq., decided was Miss Maggie Teats, and she accordingly was awarded the prize. After the exercises in the school room exercises appropriate to the planting of the Arbor day tree in honor of Carrol Crider were held. Miss Bessie Stroop read a well prepared history of the class. The tree planted is called a "Tulip" and is a very nice growing one.

Robbery at Scotia.

Some of the rural towns of Centre county seem just now to be receiving some attention from burglars. Last Thursday night a party of of these gentlemen visited the town of Scotia; from tracks made by them it is supposed that there were four concerned in the robbery. They visited the store of Hoover and Emerick, forcing an entrance through a front window they secured what change had been left in the drawer, supposed to be about five dollars; several pairs of shoes and some clothing. Moved by a spirit of vandalism they threw goods about the store and left things in a general state of confusion. From there it is supposed that they went to the railroad station and tool house got out the truck, broke into the station, ransacked every drawer and pigeon hole in the place, scattered all the papers they could find over the floor and got everything into as great confusion as possible, tore the telephone wire loose destroying the connection of that instrument with the exchange, then left for parts unknown. As may be expected when morning came the people were very much excited over the matter. We hope some effective steps will be taken to run these rogues down, as it is not pleasant to have such funny fellows running about.

A Brave Man

They had all seen service in the war and were telling stories of life in the camp and on the field, as they sat around the stove at the Eureka Grocery store, Bellefonte, Pa. There was James Milliken. David Butts. William Jones. W M Reese George Cox and many others. one old soldier was telling about his colonel who fought clear through the war in the most reckless fashion and came out of more than fifty battles in good shape and wearing a major generals uniform. After narrating some of his most terrific deeds' he said:

"Yet with all his dash and daring the old man was not impetuous. In the most dangerous and critical moments he was the coolest. Indeed it is said that in his entire career he never lost his head."

"Of course not," interrupted John Laurie who had never. smelt powder, "because don't you know if he had lost his head' it would have killed him don't you know."

—The Presbyterians of Bellefonte want the World's Fair closed on Sunday. The managers of the Fair are asking aid from congress and the church here and through out the state are protesting against the granting of additional national aid unless the managers will close on Sunday and prohibit the sale of liquor on the grounds. Gen. Beaver introduced a series of resolutions on the subject, setting forth seven good reasons why the fair should not be open on Sunday, which were passed unanimously.

PERSONAL PENCILINGS.

Miss Bella Rankin's school planted a vine in honor of Prof. D. M. Lieb on arbor day.

F. H. Clemson and wife have returned from their wedding trip and are "at home" to their friends at Scotia.

Rev. R. H. Stine, who was lately visiting friends and relatives at Buffalo Run, payed a short visit to his cousin, John Stine, at Philipsburg.

Dr. H. K. Hoy. represents Bellefonte Castle of the Knights of the Golden Eagle at the gathering of the Grand castle which is in session at Chambersburg this week. Dr Kirk attends to his practice while he is away.

Rev. R. H. Stine, of New Bloomfield, Perry county, has been visiting relatives and friends at Buffalo Run where he formerly lived. He supplied the pulpit at Gray's church while there. His many friends were glad to welcome him back.

Mr. and Mrs.. P Gray Meek, of Bellefonte and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kurtz, of Center Hall, are off for a trip across the continent with the National Editoral Association. They left Philadelphia last Saturday. We wish them a pleasant voyage.

C. W. Hofler, of Philipsburg, makes frequent visits to Bellefonte to look after his chances for the nomination for Prothonotary on the democratic ticket. Mr. Hoffer has many friends here and should he get the nomination followed by an election will make a good officer. There is no reason however why he should get republican votes. He is a democrat from away back, has not a drop of republican blood in his veins and would not vote for a republican on any account. He would think a poor democrat was better than a good republican.

Miss Kate M. Green, daughter of F. Potts Green, of Bellefonte, has for several years given much attention to the art of crayon drawing and oil painting she had become so proficient in this work that she had many scholars to learn of her. Wishing to perfect herself in her chosen profession she several months ago decided to go to New York and receive instructions from the best artists in the country, and she went. Last Thursday she returned home and we understand intends to open a studio where she will be glad to see her old pupils and all others who desire to take lessons in this noble accomplishment. With the advantage she has now had there is no doubt she is the best equipped person in the county to impart knowledge of this art to others.

An Electric Railroad.

Recently a charter was granted at the State Department in Harrisburg to the Lewistown and Bellefonte Electric Railway Company with a capital of $400,000. W. S. Stevenson, of McVeytown, is president of the company. The line is to extend from Reedsville to Bellefonte, a distance of but 25 miles. If this road should be built it would considerably shorten the distance between Bellefonte and the east, as that way it would only be 30 miles to Lewistown, while now by way of Tyrone, the shortest route, it is just 89 miles, 59 miles further. Therefore, we say, by all means let us have the electric road.

—A correspondent of Boggs township wants the people of that locality to fix up their fences and not pay any attention to the herd law. Fix up the fences. he says and let us be neighbors and give the cows a chance. This is right, be neighborly, live and let live; fix up the fences and dont rush into court for damages against a neighbor. Act like christians and the law will give you no trouble.

—Mrs. David Miess, of Buffalo Run, has lately suffered from a severe sickness. She was attended by Dr. Irwin, of Julian, who has lately commenced to practice there. It is said he is meeting with good success.

—Ed McGinley, of Pleasant Gap, just thinks he has done it now for sure. His wife presented him with a pair of twin boys last week Monday and Ed. is as happy as a dog with two tails.

Keller is Coming.

Final arrangements have been made with Keller, the magician, and he will appear before the people of Bellefonte Saturday, May 21.

—Miss Chestie C. Hoy, of Bellefonte, and J. C. Hockenbury, of Jacksonville, are students at the State Normal school, at West Chester.

Attempted Robbery of The Penns Valley Bank, at Centre Hall.

Last Thursday morning at about one o'clock Clem Deininger, a clerk employed at the Centre Hall bank and who sleeps in the bank at night, was awakened by the barking of a dog in the store of Wolf & Crawford, which joins the bank building or is a part of it. Listening a few moments he heard a noise as though persons were around the building. There are an upper and lower set of blinds to the windows, the upper blinds were open the lower closed. Looking through the upper part of the window he was startled to see the face of a man gazing into the room; without hesitation he fired his revolver at the unwelcome intruder. The man dropped and Deinger supposed he might have shot him which turned out not to be the case, however, upon investigation. He then ran to the door and discharged his revolver several times in order to arouse the people near. William B. Mingle, the cashier, and several others were soon on the ground. The sound of retreating horses' feet were heard in the distance and some tools were found which the men had left in their haste to get away. They were not pursued. This was the same night as the robbery at Scotia and might have been the same gang. If so they are evidently not professional bank robbers or we might have a different story to chronicle.

A Very Pleasant Occasion.

On account of the crowded state of our advertising columns many items that we should have given were unavoidably left out last week among which was mention of the very pleasant party that gathered at the house of John L. Rote, at Coleville near Bellefonte, on Wednesday, April 27, this being the forty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Rote's birth, He has a very large circle of friends and many of them gathered there. A pleasant time was had, excellent refreshments were served. Mr. Rote is one of the most prominent members of the U. B. church in this town and teaches a class in the Sunday school, all young ladies. His scholars took this occasion to present him with an elegant Oxford teacher's Bible, Presiding Elder, T. P. Orner, of Altoona, made the presentation speech in his usual eloquent manner. The pastor of the church, Rev. George Eminhizer, on account of himself and wife presented him with a beautiful. bound Volume, History of the late Charles Spurgeon, by Rev. Russell H. Conwell, an excellent work just issued and of which Rev. Eminhizer is agent for this county. Mr. Rote, in accepting these kind tokens of regard from his scholars and pastor and lady, made a neat and eloquent speech of acceptance. The occasion was very pleasant and will be long remembered by all who were present.

A Needed Reform.

The transfer of the Sheriff's office from its present location in the jail to the court house or some office in the diamond is a change that would not only be convenient for the sheriff, but to the county officers and all citizens who may have business with that officer. We understand that Sheriff Ishler is trying to persuade the commissioners to secure him quarters more convenient for the accommodation of the public. We are certain that a change of this kind would give general atisfaction. We believe the present board of commissioners are trying to do their duty in a fair and impartial manner and that they will make this change as soon as they find. upon inquiry, that such action would be for the promotion of effective public service and general convenience.

The Borough Statement.

If there are any errors in the Borough statement this year (and none is claimed to be, except that some who received orders for breaking stone claim that they should have been explained by the words, "for broken stone"), it is not the fault of the auditors for these gentlemen took exceeding great care to make their report exactly correct. We are certain that as far as they are responsible the report is as correct as it is possible to make it. If Ben Fulton broke stone and did not get the proper credit it is a matter between him and the Poor Overseers and no fault of the auditors.

Comrades of Gregg Post No. 95 G. A. R.

You are ordered to report at the next regular meeting of the Post on Monday evening May 15th in full uniforms as it will be the regular annual inspection, and other business of importance to be attended to.

By order of the Commander
THOS. R. BENNER
